Inside Richard Nixon: The Struggle of Two Men

By BRUCE MAZLISH

(Mazlish is professor of history at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and author of the forthcoming book, "In Search of Nixon: a Psychohistorical Inquiry." He wrote this analysis of Nixon's character for The Washington Post).

Americans have long been searching for Richard Nixon, for a guiding purpose behind his apparent contradictions, for the man behind the policies.

They are forever perplexed by his sudden turnabouts from cold war warrior to the Peking summit, from free-market economics to the wage-price freeze. Just as they think they have hit him in their sights, Richard Nixon is off again on another spree of ambivalence.

There is, for some reason, a great reluctance to accept the fact that a central characteristic of the man is ambivalence itself. After all, ambivalence — conflicting feelings toward an object or idea, love-hate impulses and the like — is a trait found in most people; what is extraordinary is only the degree to which it is present in the president.

Gladden Freudians

To understand Richard Nixon, then, one must look to the sources of his particular ambivalences, to his childhood and youth, and especially to his parents. There, in a manner to gladden the heart of any Freudian analyst, can be found the origins of an unusually mixed combative and peaceful nature.

Nixon's mother was a Quaker, devoted to peace. His father was a "Bible-pounding" Methodist, temporarily converted to Quakerism at the time of his marriage but relapsing later, and taking young Richard with him.

Overlooked by almost all commentators is the fact that the day after Richard entered high school, his father took him and his two brothers to Los Angeles to attend the revival meetings conducted by Chicago evangelist Paul Rader. As Mr. Nixon tells it in Billy Graham's magazine, Decision: "We joined hundreds of others that night in making our personal commitments to Christ and Christian service."

The father, Frank Nixon, was also notorious for his temper and irritability. And to complicate matters further, it was the peaceful mother who seemed "strong," and the competitive father who because of his lack of success, especially financial success, seemed "weak." It is little wonder that Richard became unusually ambivalent.

By the time he was 12, Richard had decided to follow the inspiration of his father, who loved to argue and debate. He would become a "lawyer who couldn't be bought."

From this decision, it was only a short step to entering, as Mr. Nixon himself put it, the "warfare of politics." It was a step that greatly saddened his mother, though his volunteering for the navy in the Second World War, contrary to Quaker principles, had already prepared her for the blow and for his future vocation.

The rest of the background is familiar to anyone who has followed Nixon's career to the presidency. The competitive, fighting "Tricky Dicky," enamored of "strength" and "strong men," is a person we know well.

This is the Nixon who speaks with contempt of the weak, self-indulgent students — those "bums" — and contrasts them with the brave soldiers who "stand tall" in Vietnam. This is the Nixon who wants as advisers "people that are strong, people who aren't panicking . . . Somebody who brings serenity, calmness or strength into the room": a John Newton Mitchell, who is "strong," seemingly imperturable, free of doubts, advocating a "get tough" policy; a Spiro Agnew, picked it seems partly because he impressed Nixon at first sight as somebody who was sure of himself, who was without weakness, who's "got it;" and a John Connally, the latest addition to the president's circle of "strong men."

(Though Nixon does not mention it, he appears also to need "weaker" men, such as his friend, Robert Finch, in fact, Nixon's view of his cabinet, with the recent exception of Connally, seems not to allow for "strong" men there. Such balancing of strong and weak corresponds with Nixon's own ambivalence.) In short, this is the Richard Nixon who, desperately afraid that the United States will appear "a pitiful, helpless giant," drops bombs on Vietnam and strikes bold and warlike postures.

Bad Conscience

Less known, however, is the Nixon who has an "obsession" with peace, to use his own word. His identification with his mother in this matter, though not as obvious, is as strong as with his father's pugnacity. My speculation is that it leaves him with a bad conscience about his aggressiveness.

But more to our point here, it also endows him with a sincere dedication to international peace.

Pacifist and Warrior Locked Together

From his entrance into politics as a congressman representing an isolationist district, Nixon surprisingly showed himself an internationalist in orientation. Thus, he worked on the Herter committee, whose report led to the Marshall Plan, and considered this the most important service of his congressional career. In 1940, he supported Wendell Willkie; as he later labeled himself, he was a "whole-worlder."

In the 1940s and '50s, of course, internationalism was connected for many Americans with anti-communism; e.g., the Marshall Plan was to save Western Europe from the communists. It is this fact that has tended to obscure Nixon's sincere commitment to peace. I believe we catch the true flavor of his feelings on the matter in an unusually candid statement he made to Walter Cronkite in 1960:

"Well, my major interest ever since I came to Washington, and long before that, has been in the field of foreign policy and of foreign affairs . . . The reason that, to me, the overriding issue of our times is foreign affairs, is where it comes right out of my whole background. I indicated, for example, that my mother is a Quaker. She is a very good one. I am not as good. But, from the time that I can remember, I know that she and my grandmother, her mother who lived to be 93, used to talk about their 'concern,' which is a Quaker way of expressing it, for building a better life not only for people in this country but for people everywhere. This humanitarian approach to the problems of the world, an approach, incidentally, which they have, my mother and my grandmother, more in their character than I have, but which I certainly have acquired from them to an extent; this is something that I think has affected my whole attitude toward public service generally."

Nixon then concludes, "and, as I see the responsibilities for the next president . . . his major role will be to attempt to make a contribution toward building a world peace, with freedom for all people." I am prepared to believe Nixon when he says he has "an obsession on this point."

At this juncture, other "obsessions" swing into action. For example, a few weeks before the interview with Cronkite, Nixon said, "I think that we can have peace. I think that we can keep our own freedom, and I think that we can win the struggle against slavery and for freedom throughout the world . . ."

Characteristically, we have the usual Nixon division into all good and all bad, slavery and freedom, aggressor and peace-loving one worlder. It is these opposing tendencies in his personality that lead to confusion of thought and often murky speeches difficult for the public to decipher.

Deny His Pugnacity

What compounds the problem at this point, moreover, is Nixon's compelling necessity to deny his aggressive and combative feeling. Standing as we do on the eve of his visit to Moscow in May, we might recall with profit his earlier visit, and his kitchen debate with then Premier Nikita Khrushchev.

Nixon's version of the discussion is given in his book, Six Crises. Khrushchev, he tells us, "does not need to be convinced of our good intentions. He knows we are not aggressors and do not threaten the security of the Soviet Union." Again, "it was my belief that Khrushchev knew that our intentions were peaceful."

The fact that the Russians might remember the American intervention in the Russian civil war, the American willingness, in part, to have Germany invade Russia, and other matters was all written off by Nixon as merely an "act" on Khrushchev's part. In this denial of his own aggressive intent, and this refusal to recognize his opponent's real fears, Nixon seems at one with much of America's recent self-image.

Such a statement must be placed in the context of Nixon's parental models: the mother who did not wish him to enter the "warfare of politics," and the father with "his fierce competitive drive."

Is it any wonder that Richard Nixon has a problem making a decision to fight, to release his competitive drive, and that he feels a letdown, as his account of his crises informs us, after the semi-forbidden impulses have been unleashed?

But having indicated Nixon's ambivalence in this matter, we must note that he did, indeed, gain strength from his difficulties. Like his Russian foes, he learned to "steel" himself, and to reject the softer, debilitating, and feminine impulses that threaten him so fearfully — for the simple reason that they are so strongly contained within him. Out of "weakness," then, Nixon can be said to have drawn "strength."

Is such personal "strength," however good for the cause of peace? Nixon, we must remember, like so many of his generation, is a cold war warrior. Cognitively, he remembers that appeasement led to the Second World War.

As he recalls telling the protesting students in his predawn visit to the Lincoln Memorial after Kent State, "I know it is awfully hard to keep this in perspective. I told them that in 1938 I thought Neville Chamberlain was the greatest man living and Winston Churchill was a madman. It was not until years later that I realized Neville Chamberlain was a good man but Winston Churchill was right."

The cognitive knowledge fits perfectly with Nixon's personal feelings about being strong. As he told Cronkite, "I think the way . . . to have peace is to be strong and be prepared to resist those who threaten peace." It also fits with his fierce conviction about competitiveness: peace is something that must be "won."

For Richard Nixon the great danger is that he and America will appear impotent, will go "soft;" will allow themselves to be "humiliated."

Thus peace for Nixon can only be won by a kind of "warfare": He and the United States must show itself strong. Since peace, however, is generally secured through realistic compromise, at least where military victory is absent, the compulsive need to appear strong can often hamper meaningful negotiations.

Needs an Enemy

China, at least at the moment, appears to allow Nixon a balance between his ambivalences, and thus a chance to assert the pragmatic considerations of power politics along with his peaceful desires.

The combative side of Nixon, however, with its constant need for an enemy on whom to load his negative feelings, has figured unduly in his attitudes toward India and Bangladesh, "tilting" him against them.

Will he also require the Soviet Union as such an opponent? Only time, and the results of the Moscow trip in May, will help us to answer this question.

THE LAST POST

(From an earlier article which appeared in the St. John's Alternate Press).

Some of the more important issues on which last October's Newfoundland election campaign was fought were absent from the province's second campaign in five months. One of these was Joey Smallwood, now without a House of Assembly seat for the first time since 1949. Another was the government's option to buy the giant Bowaters paper mill in Corner Brook.

New premier Frank Moores cancelled the option and the studies which had been ordered to test the feasibility of a government takeover of the plant soon after taking office in January, and dismissed the plan as nothing more than a "political gimmick." He said a PC government "would not go in and disrupt reputable companies with world-wide respected reputations."

Thus ended a controversy that had lasted since August, when Bowaters officials informed the provincial government that they were planning to close down their 100,000-ton-a-year Number Seven mill in November, putting 350 mill employees and about 800 loggers out of work.

Security Lost

The announcement shook Corner Brook, Newfoundland's second city, to its roots. For many workers and families, it meant that the security they had known since Bowaters — the city's only industrial employer — had first moved there in the twenties was gone.

Hit only slightly less hard was then premier Smallwood, about to face a tough battle for re-election. Meeting company and public officials in Corner Brook the next day, he lashed out at the multinational Bowater empire for favouring its other mills over its Newfoundland operation.

"I suspect that this mill is paying toll, tribute, cash to the international Bowaters Corporation," he said. He asked for, and later received, a three-month option from the company to purchase their Newfoundland assets, valued at near $100 million.

Many shared Smallwood's suspicions that the Corner Brook mill was not keeping up with technological change, that Bowaters were giving priority to the other mills in the United States to supply the North American market, and that they were generally neglecting the Corner Brook operation. Paper makers charged that the company failed to keep up with changing technology, and that the Number Seven machine was obsolete from the day it was bought.

'Be Sensible'

Both party leaders realized the seriousness of the Corner Brook situation, at least in political and election terms. Moores called on the Liberals to "end this approach (the proposed takeover) and handle Newfoundland's problems in a sensible way."

On October 2, a meeting between provincial cabinet ministers and Bowater brass solidified the deal. A nine-month option to purchase the Bowater assets was given the provincial government for $200,000 (with 75 per cent of that returning to the government if and when the purchase is made).

"We will not allow it to fold," said Smallwood during the crisis, echoing Newfoundlanders' fear of 'losing' industry at any cost. "We intend to keep it going if it is the last thing we do."

But nationalize? Not quite. The mill would be bought by the government and run by a crown croporation. But, said the premier, "I don't think that a crown corporation would operate the mill indefinitely. It might be wise to wait for markets to improve, as they will, before turning it back to private enterprise."

What was termed 'nationalization' of the Bowater property was nothing more than a promised temporary takeover in the heat of an election. The government bails out the failing industry when the profits are sinking, re-establishes it, and then hands it back to the capitalist to let him start making his profits again.

They Were Naive

The reaction to the takeover by labor leaders, journalists and politicians was twofold. On the one hand they were rightly suspicious of Smallwood's motives in the matter. On the other, they were naive toward their economic benefacter.

"The announcement (of the proposed takeover) . . . raises many fears as it's always questionable whether the government can run industry as efficiently as private enterprise," wrote the head of the local pulp and paper union. His questioning was echoed by editorials in the largest provincial daily newspapers.

Bowaters was exonerated, the government solution itself was the target for the criticism. Perhaps it was because of the people's old attitude of fearing to bite the hand of the industry that meagrely feeds them.

The Bowater operation began in 1925, nineteen years after the first Newfoundland mill at Grand Falls started production. Bowaters had to be bailed out of bankruptcy in the thirties.

"The concessions granted the two companies were unique in North America," writes Richard Gwyn in his book on Smallwood. They paid no stumpage fees on company-owned land, undertook no conservation or reforestation, and paid virtually no taxes to the provincial government."

Instead of taxes, Bowaters paid the province $150,000 a year. By contrast, in the first year after Newfoundland entered Confederation, the company paid $3.5 million in Canadian corporation tax to the federal government.

The Bowater operation in Newfoundland is worth $100 million; it owns the Bowater power company and has timber rights to 11,000 square miles of Newfoundland — more than one quarter of the island.

28,000 Employees

Bowaters Newfoundland is part of a huge international England - based empire established in a dozen countries, employing more than 28,000 people, and with its own fleet of ships. Its assets are in the neighborhood of half a billion dollars. Its North American empire, started at Corner Brook, accounts for half those assets, including the largest newsprint mill in the United States, in Tennessee, opened in 1954 and producing 430,000 tons of newsprint a year.

Bowaters closed its machine on December 31, putting 350 men out of work. Though an upswing in markets this year is being predicted by the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association in its report released in January, Bowaters Newfoundland has no plans to restart and rehire.

OTTAWA BUDGET ON MAY 8

OTTAWA (UPI) — Finance Minister John Turner announced today he would present a budget on the evening of May 8.

The announcement dispelled persistent rumors that the government was planning a June election, although an election in the summer months remained a remote possibility.

"I expect to present a budget in this house on the evening of May 8," Turner said in answer to a question from Conservative finance critic Marcel Lambert.

The budget will be Turner's first since he took over the finance portfolio in a cabinet shuffle May 28.

During discussions of possible election dates in the past two weeks, Liberal sources had reported that Turner was among those ministers pressing hardest for a June election — which would require dissolving Parliament immediately and would avoid any need for a budget this spring.

The budget was expected to include promised amendments to the government's controversial tax reform legislation. The government admitted when the bill passed Parliament in December that there were deficiencies requiring early correction.

ASTRONAUTS SPLASH DOWN —ALL SAFE

HOUSTON (UPI) — The Apollo 16 astronauts splashed down in the Pacific Ocean today at 2:45 p.m. EST, ending an 11-day, $445 million moon mission they believe will unlock still more secrets of earth's nearest neighbor.

John Young, Thomas Mattingly and Charles Duke splashed down safely, having rescued their $445-million expedition to the lunar highlands from the brink of failure. As it was, they returned a day early.

Surprise Strike Hits Vancouver

Times News Services

VANCOUVER — City operations ground to a halt today as 2,800 civic employees walked off the job in a surprise strike over deadlocked contract negotiations.

The city's 1,000 outside workers voted overwhelmingly at a one-hour meeting this morning to back up a call by union leaders to join the strike action initiated by 1,000 inside workers in an attempt to force a contract settlement.

Police and fire departments were operating normally, but most other city services were shut down, including city hall, welfare offices and maintenance yards.

As news of the strike spread, the city's welfare office was the scene of a spontaneous demonstration by about 400 welfare recipients who milled in front of the building and blocked traffic to bring attention to their own plight.

The Municipal Labor Relations Bureau, which negotiates contract settlements on behalf of Vancouver and six suburban municipalities, scheduled an afternoon meeting to consider the developments.

Ken Derby, spokesman for the striking Municipal and Regional Employees Union, said the action was being taken because of the city's failure to resume negotiations toward a new contract.

"They've been playing around with us, stalling, putting us off, and they have no real intention of bargaining," he said.

The inside workers walked off the job at 6:30 a.m. and strung picket lines outside city buildings.

Both civic unions staged a 24-hour walkout April 11 to protest what they said was the MLRB's unwillingness to negotiate a new contract to replace one that expired Dec. 31.

Talks broke off last month when the MLRB made what it said was its final offer of a 9.55-per-cent increase in wages and fringe benefits.

Bennett Offers To Arbitrate

VANCOUVER (CP) — Premier Bennett has offered to settle personally British Columbia's construction industry contract dispute — as a reluctant arbitrator.

Bennett offered his services Wednesday when he returned from a trip to New York shortly after the Construction Labor Relations Association, representing 840 contractors, announced it will lock out 30,000 members of 18 building trades unions at 4:30 p.m. Friday.

"It's not something I would choose to do," the premier said, adding that both sides would have to agree in advance to accept his settlement as binding.

"It would be a difficult job, but it would be my duty if they can't get anybody else," Bennett said.

He said he had talked about the dispute with Labor Minister James Chabot and that the minister is still trying to find an acceptable arbitrator.

In Victoria Chabot said today the government will not act this week or next to end the construction industry lockout.

Following 90-minute cabinet meeting this morning, Chabot said there is no likelihood that the lockout by the Construction Labor Relations Association will be averted.

He also indicated the government is unlikely to tolerate another three-month tie-up like the one that occured during the summer in 1970.

The minister said that the lockout was "perfectly legal" but the cabinet would have to decide, once it begins, "whether it's of public concern" to order the construction industry back to work.

More Bombs —Nixon

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon announced Wednesday night plans to pull another 20,000 United States troops out of South Vietnam by July 1 and said the U.S. will keep on bombing North Vietnam until Hanoi halts its "massive invasion" of the South.

Nixon, in a televised address, appealed for country-wide support for what he termed "this final challenge" to his program to get U.S. troops out of South Vietnam without "surrendering our friends to Communist aggression."

TESTING TIME

Nixon portrayed the Communist offensive in the South as a time of test in which Saigon forces — if they get continued U.S. air and naval help — will foil a desperate Hanoi gamble.

His new two-month withdrawal schedule will cut remaining U.S. forces in South Vietnam to 49,000, which he noted was less than 10 per cent of the 549,000 authorized there when he took office in January, 1969.

Hanoi's "one remaining hope," Nixon said in words aimed at stateside critics, "is to win in the Congress of the United States, and among the

Bernadette Is Pardoned As U.K. Lifts March Ban

BELFAST — The British government today lifted Northern Ireland's eight-month ban on organized marches and declared an immediate amnesty for all persons convicted of organizing or participating in them.

Among those affected by the amnesty were Catholic civil rights leaders Bernadette Devlin and Frank McManus, both members of parliament who received six-month suspended sentences for participating in illegal marches.

An announcement from the office of William Whitelaw, secretary of state for Ulster since Britain took over direct rule of the province last month, abolished the ban and declared the amnesty.

SNIPER'S CORNER

Northern Ireland's Protestant-dominated government, suspended by the British takeover, imposed the ban last Aug. 9 and instituted internment without trial of suspected IRA members.

A delegation of 22 women from the Creggan Estate, a Catholic stronghold in Londonderry, called at the gunmen's local headquarters and appealed to them not to use their homes as cover.

The housewives all live in Demesne Avenue, overlooking the Bligh's Lane army post, which has come under almost daily attack from IRA guerrillas. One end of the street is known as "sniper's Corner."

One of the women said the IRA told them it would try to avoid the area.

"Believe me, most people in the Creggan Estate want peace," a member of the delegation told reporters.

This was the second time in a month that Catholic women living in "flashpoint" areas have called for a truce. A similar appeal was made by a group of housewives in Belfast's Andersonstown district.

KWAME NKRUMAH, former president of Ghana and leader of the African independence movement, died today in Conakry, Guinea, according to Guinean radio reports. Nkrumah, named prime minister when Ghana gained independence from Britain in 1951, became president in 1960, but had to go into exile in Guinea when the army seized power while he was on a trip to Peking in 1966. He had been reported critically ill with cancer in recent days. He was 62.

MUSKIE PULLS OUT OF U.S. PRIMARIES

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senator Edmund Muskie, considered almost unbeatable four months ago, withdrew from the remaining democratic presidential primaries today but announced he was still available for the nomination at the convention in July.

Confronted with a series of losing primary contests, the Maine senator released the 136 delegates previously pledged to him, declaring "I want them to know that they should feel free to reassess their commitment."

"I have made the decision to withdraw from active participation in the remaining presidential primaries," Muskie sombrely told a news conference.

"I do so with regret, but I have no choice. I do not have the money to continue."

Brandt's Policy Wins Approval

BONN (CP) — A jubilant Willy Brandt beat back today an opposition attempt in the Western German parliament to oust him as chancellor, scoring a personal victory and safeguarding his peace policy for the time being.

Opposition challengers failed by two votes to win a no-confidence motion in Brandt, in a dramatic vote in the Bundestag, parliament's lower house. The opposition won 247 votes but needed 249 of the 496 members.

Brandt's triumph cleared the way for the ratification vote next week of his non-aggression treaties with Moscow and Warsaw—vital for the whole course of his policy of easing East-West tension.

But Defence Minister Helmut Schmidt, the deputy leader of Brandt's Social Democratic party, said the prospect for ratification of the treaties "is as difficult now as before."

Former chancellor Kurt George Kiesinger led the attack on Brandt in the debate before the vote and based it on opposition to the two treaties, which recognize Germany's territorial losses at the end of the Second World War.

The Christian Democrats contend that the treaties, which are crucial to the improvement of relations between West Germany and the Soviet bloc, give away too much without getting enough in return.

Bonner's First Task . . . IWA

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

Robert Bonner today took over the reins as chief executive officer for MacMillan Bloedel and his first step was to meet IWA negotiators and urge them to accept arbitration in their wage dispute.

"In every case where there has been a strike, third party intervention has been needed to resolve it," he said in an interview with the Times before entering the meeting.

"There has never been a case of one side or the other backing down once a strike has begun in the forestry industry. If third party intervention is inevitable it only makes sense that we plan for it now so that we can prevent damage to the economy through a disruptive strike."

He expressed the hope that the dispute would be in the hands of an arbitrator before the legal strike date, June 15.

Bonner's rise to the top of the country's largest forestry company caps a remarkable career. He was appointed attorney-general at the age of 31, just four years after he graduated from the University of B.C.

As well as the attorney-general's portfolio he served briefly as education minister (1953-54) and as minister of industrial development, trade and commerce (1957-64).

He was widely regarded as Premier Bennett's right-hand man and heir-apparent but after 16 years as attorney-general he resigned to become senior vice-president of administration for MacMillan Bloedel.

Subsequently he became executive vice-president and then vice-president of the company.

J. V. Clyne, 70, president of MacMillan Bloedel and its predecessor company since 1958, announced his retirement at the end of the company's annual meeting in Vancouver Wednesday. (See story Page 13.)

Bonner's appointment as president took effect when he arrived for work at 8:30 p.m. today and wage negotiations with the IWA were very much on his mind.

He noted that the company's first quarter showing was strong (net income of $9 million compared with $1.4 million in the first quarter last year) but added that the whole year's income must be taken into account. Effective return on investment in 1971 was "only 4.1 per cent, less than could be obtained by investing the money in government bonds.

He was not optimistic about early success in his campaign for a selective free trade area with the United Sates. There was some resistance to the idea in eastern Canada and in the United States.

cal Association's demand for a 6.5 per cent increase in doctors' fees, Bennett said:

"If it's 6.5 per cent on the individual average earnings of doctors, that would be all right, but if it is 6.5 per cent on the rate structure, that would be a different thing."

"The government would be willing to guarantee the doctors, I'm sure, a 6.5 per cent increase on their earnings," said Bennett.

Doctors and Provincial Secretary Wesley Black met last week to consider a revised medical care fee schedule presented by the doctors, cutting increases in their schedule by about two per cent to roughly 6.5 per cent.

Bennett also said one of his main reasons for going to the U.S. was to see what benefits have resulted from the wage and price controls in that country, imposed last August by President Nixon.

"The benefits are way greater than what we have been led to believe by press reports," Bennett said.

Canada, as an exporting country, must impose wage, price and interest controls when such controls are in effect south of the border, said the Social Credit leader.

The premier sent a telegram to federal Finance Minister John Turner April 7 calling for immediate imposition of wage, price and interest controls by Ottawa to fight inflation.

But Wednesday he added that he would be satisfied if the federal government would impose the controls for one year only, with the understanding that it would review the need for continuation of the controls each year.

Turning to the Moran Dam issue, Bennett said he can't understand why two of his cabinet ministers keep talking about it.

"As long as I'm premier, we're not going to build it, that's a cinch," he said.

Then why do Resources Minister Ray Williston and Recreation Minister Ken Kiernan keep saying the government may be forced to build the dam to ease downstream flooding?

"I don't know. They have a right to free speech."

Commenting on Vancouver city council's decision to list in a letter its objections to the plans for the government skyscraper, Bennett said his government will listen to any suggestions made by Vancouver, "but the government has got to make its own decisions. They want it badly in Burnaby, you know."

TEAMSTERS TO FIGHT

TORONTO (CP) — The Canadian director of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters says the union will be fighting with all its resources against the government of Premier Bennett in B.C.'s next election.

Senator Edward Lawson, who sits as an independent in the Senate, told a two-day conference of the Teamsters' Canadian section that the union probably will back sitting New Democratic Party members and oppose all other Social Credit members who seek re-election.

He told the conference, which ended Wednesday, the Teamster participation in politics will be left to union organizations in each province, adding that the union definitely will move against governments it considers hostile to organized labor.

The action in B.C. was spurred by organized labor's opposition to the proposed Bill 88, which would have placed sharp restrictions on unions in that province.

The bill has since been shelved, but is still held over the heads of unions. All the sitting NDP members opposed Bill 88.

Six More Unionists Jailed

QUEBEC (CP) — Two more unions and six officers received heavy fines and prison terms today from Mr. Justice Georges Pelletier of Quebec Superior Court for contempt of court in defying injunctions related to Quebec's recent public service strike.

Mr. Justice Pelletier fined a hospital service union at St. Joseph Hospital in Riviere du Loup $10,000. Three of its officers received prison terms of three months each and individual fines of $2,500.

He also fined a maintenance workers union at Jewish Hospital of Hope in Montreal $2,500. Three of its officers were sentenced to a month each in prison and fined $1,000 each.

people of the United States, the victory they cannot win among the people of South Vietnam or on the battlefield in South Vietnam."

"The South Vietnamese have made great progress and are now bearing the brunt of the battle," he said. "We can now see the day when no more Americans will be involved there at all. . . .

"We must not falter. For all that we have risked and all that we have gained over the years now hangs in the balance during the coming weeks and months."

Meanwhile, a secret U.S. government study, newly leaked to various news agencies, says intelligence experts told Nixon three years ago a settlement resulting in a Communist controlled South Vietnam "would not necessarily unhinge" the rest of Southeast Asia.

The intelligence officials said Hanoi's attempt to push gains in the two most vulnerable area countries, Cambodia and Laos, probably would be limited to political agitation, at least at the outset.

PREOCCUPIED

Hanoi would be preoccupied, for a time at least, with the formidable task of consolidating Communist rule in South Vietnam," the experts said.

The Paris Vietnam talks resumed today after a five-week suspension but once again got nowhere. The United States kept the talks alive, however, in apparent hope that secret talks would follow.

U.S. Ambassador William Porter repeated warnings to the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong that the talks would continue only if the Communists agree to talk about the North Vietnamese invasion and other main issues.

CLOSING IN

On the war front, North Vietnamese troops attacking in great force closed in on Quan Tri from all sides today and began firing anti-personnel shells that burst in midair and rained shrapnel on the defenders and thousands of refugees.

UPI correspondent Stewart Kellerman, reporting by telephone from the U.S. military compound inside Quang Tri — South Vietnam's northernmost city — said of the night-time bombardment: "So many fires are burning on the southern edge of the city it looks like daylight."

Eighty U.S. military advisers are in Quang Tri city.

An explosion, probably an ammunition dump going up, shook the city where helpless refugees, their worldly belongings tied up in blanketed bundles, lined the streets, Kellerman reported. A South Vietnamese police officer said the police were ordered not to let them leave.

TIRES

The inside story

BIAS PLY
How it's made:
This conventional type of tire construction has 2, 4 or more overlapping fabric plies that run under the tread and around the tire at an angle from the centre line. The fabric plies can be rayon, nylon or polyester, but all four plies are made of the same fabric. Fabric types are never mixed in bias ply construction.

How it works:
Bias ply tires give you reasonably good strength, control and road handling. Bias construction tires absorb road shocks, and provide a soft quiet ride. Compared with newer construction types, conventional bias tires are more subject to "squirming" under the tread, thereby contributing to greater heat build-up and tire wear.

BELTED
How it's made:
As with conventional bias tires, overlapping fabric plies run under the tread at an angle. But these fabric body plies are then reinforced with two thicker fabric or steel belts that also run around the circumference of the tire under the tread. In belted construction, the fabric body plies can be nylon or polyester, while the belts can be rayon, fibreglass or even steel.

How it works:
Compared to the bias tire, the belted tire is slightly rougher riding at low speeds but the belts lock the tire in a rounder shape, greatly decreasing tire squirm and heat build-up. Belted tires have much more impact and road hazard resistance, better high speed performance, more traction and stability, and tread wear is decreased significantly.

Some common tire terms explained:
Beads: Rings of strong steel wires, wrapped in rubber and fabric, that fit snugly against both sides of the wheel rim and anchor the tire there.
Cord: Fibre material that goes into making up the ply of a tire. Cords are dipped in latex solution to ensure bonding between plies. Cords used today are Nylon, Polyester and Rayon.
Plies: Layers of parallel fabric cords coated with latex insulated by rubber, and running across the tire at various angles from bead to bead forming the tire carcass.
Belts: Layers of fabric or wire placed on top of or between the carcass plies under the tread between the shoulders. It stabilizes the tire into a "rounder" round, imparting unique performance qualities.

SKILLINGS BACK HOME TONIGHT

Trade and Commerce Minister Waldo Skillings is returning to his home in Victoria tonight with a broken collarbone and a cut in his forehead, a member of the family said today.

The spokesman, who didn't want to be identified, insisted "there's nothing wrong with him" beyond the obvious injuries, suffered when Skillings fell on an escalator in the Hotel Vancouver Tuesday night.

The spokesman said there is no truth to rumors that Skillings was "near death," and he was tired of being bothered by questioners.

He suggested that anyone could find out the minister's condition by visiting St. Paul's Hospital in Vancouver and asking him.

However, Skillings gave orders at the hospital that no information was to be given about the nature of his injuries or his condition.

Balance Bills Accepted—MD

Dr. Donald Shorting, the Victoria general practitioner who began "balance billing" his patients this month, said today none has refused the arrangement so far.

A former trustee on the Greater Victoria school board, Shorting began balance billing because of the 16-month impasse between provincial government and doctors on a new fee schedule.

Under the arrangement, he bills his patients directly for a fraction of the fee for his services. Medicare, which covers doctor bills for almost all B.C. residents, pays the balance.

Under terms of the Medical Services Act, a doctor balance billing must first notify his patients he intends charging above the medicare schedule. They must acknowledge notice and agree to the arrangement.

So far about 150 families cared for by Shorting have signed the necessary form. Some have taken it home to study but no one has refused to sign it.

Examples of direct cost to Shorting's patients under the balance billing system:

45 cents for an office visit.

$45 for care throughout maternity.

The portion of the bill Shorting is sending direct to patients represents the difference between what medicare pays and 90 per cent of the new fee schedule doctors introduced Jan. 1.

The Medical Services Commission, which administers medicare in B.C., has ignored the new schedule and continued to pay doctors according to its own schedule, which is 90 per cent of the doctors' schedule in use before Jan. 1.

Shorting said today he had not wanted his name included in a Times story April 15 outlining his experience with balance billing because he had not wanted to possibly disrupt negotiations between the B.C. Medical Association and government which were under way that weekend.

He indicated at that time a number of other doctors in B.C. were expected to begin balance billing this spring if no agreement on a new fee schedule could be negotiated with the provincial government.

He repeated today his reasons for going to balance billing:

he believes the doctors new fee schedule to be a fair one.

he thinks doctors have already shown restraint by agreeing to a moratorium through 1971 on fee increases.

he sees balance billing educating his patients for things to come because he anticipates government insurance plans are not in future going to be able to meet all of the rising costs of health care.

'Disciples' Sentenced

TOKYO (AP) — Three disciples of author Yukio Mishima were convicted today of charges linked to his hara-kiri suicide and sentenced to four years' imprisonment. It was the first such case in Japanese history.

The defendants were Mahiro Ogawa and Masayoshi Koga, both 23, and Hiroyasu Koga, 24. With Hissho Morita, 25, they accompanied Mishima on Nov. 25, 1970, when the 45-year-old novelist invaded the Japanese army's eastern headquarters and tried to incite the troops to rebel against Japan's no-war constitution.

When the attempt failed, Mishima disembowled himself. Morita performed the traditional beheading, then Morita committed hara-kiri and Hiroyasu Koga cut off his head.

Three judges of the district court convicted the two Kogas and Ogawa of assault and battery, murder by request, unlawful detention, inflicting injury and coercion.

Search Scaled Down

For Richer, for Poorer

The federal government's economic review published this week has the flavor of an election year. It predicts better times, even though any pronounced improvement in the unemployment situation is uncertain. There will be more spending, more borrowing, and a stimulating public demand for cars, appliances, furniture and housing. This, the review suggests, should open the way to increased productive employment. Unfortunately, such a situation also has the inherent ingredients of more inflation.

The review says the public's flow of cash and credit spending will be enhanced by government policies which encourage borrowing and foster further government pump-priming expenditures.

There is still a need for federal spending which promotes productive work rather than time-filling activities. There is room for recreational and creative enterprises, of course, but these by their nature provide little more than spending money for the participants. They do not usually produce goods to match the new purchasing power, and to that extent are directly inflationary. They are also temporary forms of activity, as a rule, when what is really wanted in Canada is an increase in permanent employment on which family careers can be planned.

The paradoxes in Canada's economic life persist. Despite the very heavy unemployment situation, the latest Bank of Montreal business review reports that over the past ten years "aggregate personal income rose by an annual average rate of 8.6 per cent." Even when adjusted for taxes and inflation, the amount of personal income available for the consumer's use rose at an average rate of 5 per cent over the same period. And in the decade ending in 1969 the average family income doubled, to reach about $9,000. This reflects, says the bank's review, not only increases in individual salaries but also an increase in the number of married women contributing cash to the family finances.

Any major changes in Canada's inflationary trend must be considered, of course, in the light of United States and other foreign movements. So long as we have trade and investment relationships with other countries, we must be influenced to some extent by their national economic developments, as they are by ours. But that does not preclude the value of, and the need for, domestic programs to promote anti-inflationary movements.

Even though the number of Canadians employed rises each year, the country's position cannot be satisfactory as long as there are more unemployed as well. Make-work hand-outs may serve to relieve the abrasion of immediate poverty; but steady, meaningful employment carries psychological benefits as well as financial — and both are necessary for the health of the nation.

"... I hope I make myself perfectly clear..."

An Ounce of Prevention

Health Minister John Munro honors a trustworthy axiom — an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure — when he advocates allocation of more of the health dollar to preventive medicine. His anxieties, and those of his senior officials, about Canada's ability to pay for its medical care programs should be widely understood. The high costs of such services are recognized, as is the fact that present practices involve waste and misapplication of highly trained personnel.

The minister is quoted as saying that doctors' skills are often greatly under-utilized in answering demands made on them by patients with minor ailments that could be attended by nurses. Inefficiency of this kind swells the costs of public health services.

But when Mr. Munro has made such points — with a desirable emphasis on keeping people fit, rather than curing them of illnesses and disease they might avoid — he has touched upon only one phase of the broad health problem now facing medicine throughout the world. The fact is that modern techniques, improved equipment and special procedures can be so expensive that their universal application is an economic impossibility. The situation in which heart cases find themselves recorded on long waiting lists for operations because the teams which perform them and the equipment which is used cannot keep up with the demand, reflects a condition not limited to British Columbia.

Given the money — and the personnel — to train the specialists and procure the equipment, it might be possible to meet existing requirements. There is no indication, however, that the money in the sums needed is available.

Under these circumstances, preventive medicine becomes evermore important, as does the elimination of waste in time, talent and money which present practice may inflict on those highly trained in the curative arts.

To Restore Canadian Control

TORONTO — The great danger, when government starts controlling the publishing industry, is political manipulation. How quickly and subtly this state of affairs can develop is revealed by the final report of the Royal Commission on Book Publishing on the subject of paperback and periodical distribution in Ontario.

Last year, the Commission recommended and the provincial government quickly introduced legislation to stop further take-overs of distributors of such periodicals by foreign interests. This final report now proposes further laws to repatriate the industry and restore Canadian control.

The principle recommendations are that distributors (or "geographical wholesalers," as the Commission prefers to call them for technical reasons) of paperbacks and periodicals be required to carry "reasonable inventories" of such Canadian publications; that national distributors, almost all of whom are foreign-owned, be required to supply all regional distributors on an equal-terms, equal-service basis on pain of having their publications banned; that future acquisitions of retail news outlets and bookstores by distributors be prohibited, and that henceforth no foreigners be allowed to buy retail news outlets and bookstores in the province.

Strong Stuff

This is pretty strong stuff but the Commission makes a case for each proposal that can hardly be faulted, given the basic premise that foreign domination of the industry is not desirable. The Commission's description of how paperbacks and periodicals are marketed leaves no doubt that drastic measures are required if Canadian publications are to stand half a chance.

The same cannot be said, however, for the Commission's most drastic proposal, namely that regional distributors be limited to market areas of 1,250,000 population. The Commission's case for this proposal is disingenuous and smacks of a political vendetta, because its only practical effect is to force the mammoth Metro Toronto News Company to dispose of over half of its business.

The rationale, such as it is, for this proposal is that regional distributors of paperbacks and periodicals have arrangements with their suppliers, the national distributors, which amount to franchises for their geographic area. These franchises are worth considerable money. Since the national distributors are outside the country, beyond Ontario's control, how can the province prevent discrimination in their supply treatment of franchise holders which might put some out of business and enable a favored few to expand to the point of monopoly?

The Commission translates this question into: "What is the largest exclusive wholesaling area that would be consistent with the public interest?" and then proceeds to recommend, arbitrarily, its 1,250,000 population criterion, which figure it candidly admits has no relevance to any of the 20 Ontario wholesalers except the Metro Toronto News Company, which is now the sole wholesaler in a market area of 3,300,000 population.

RETAIL CONTROLS
... pretty strong stuff

Metro Toronto News Company is a limited partnership, owned by the Molasky family of St. Louis, Missouri, and the Rottman family of Bridgeport, Connecticut. It is managed by the Pierce News Company of St. Louis, a Molasky company. In turn, it owns or controls distributing companies in London, Sarnia and Belleville.

The Ontario Commission on Book Publishing has no reason to like the Metro Toronto News Company. The company's acquisitions of the distributorships in the above-mentioned cities occurred after the Commission last year recommended foreign take-overs be stopped but before the government's implementing legislation could take effect. The legislation did prevent a take-over by Metro Toronto News of a Kitchener distributorship, after which two major national distributors, Triangle Publications Inc. and MacFadden-Bartell Corporation transferred the supply rights for certain key publications from the Kitchener company to Metro Toronto News.

Stymied in Ontario, the company apparently is looking at other provinces. The Commission reported it had learned Pierce News of St. Louis had tried, unsuccessfully, to buy Benjamin-Montreal News Reg'd. of Montreal. The Montreal firm was then told by Triangle Publications that it would be no longer supplied with key publications, and was also informed by Colonial Distributors of Scarborough that it was appointing another distributor for the Montreal area. Colonial is a corporate kin of Metro Toronto News.

Abuse Proposed

Understandably the Commission would like to put a stop to this kind of thing but it is essential that it should not cut corners to do it. In coming up with a proposal that would either force Metro Toronto News to sell out or lose half its business, the Commissioners (lawyer Richard Rohmer, publicist Dalton Camp and Marsh Jeanneret of the University of Toronto Press) have proposed an abuse of the province's licensing power, which is a rather hair-raising thing to do when one is talking about the publishing business.

The province does not need further legislation to prevent foreign take-overs — that was done last year. As for the power of foreign suppliers, beyond Ontario jurisdiction, to discriminate in favour of their Canadian subsidiaries, the Commission has proposed that in such case, the government simply forbid the sale of all the supplier's paperbacks and periodicals in the province until the discrimination stops.

These measures would seem to take care of the problem posed by Metro Toronto News. If not, the Commission should propose the company be put out of business on the ground it is not Canadian-owned, which would be quite within the power of the province to do. But to argue that it should have its wings clipped because it is a monopoly and too big, when all distributorships are in effect monopolies, is to claim a jurisdiction over trade and commerce which belongs to the federal government.

That kind of thinking hardly reassures those who worry when the government starts deciding what will or will not be read.

Classics in Misjudgment

WASHINGTON — The Vietnam War has illustrated once more the limitations of political leadership and the unpredictability of human conduct. Nothing is more tragic in this seemingly endless story of human weakness than the consistent misjudgments on both sides of the enemy on the other side. Time and again, by misconceiving the leaders and people they were fighting against, both have failed to serve their own best interests. It is happening again in Hanoi.

First, it was President Kennedy who thought he could bluff Moscow and intimidate Hanoi by increasing the American contingent in Saigon to 16,000 American "advisers." Then Lyndon Johnson, in the critical period after his spectacular victory as a "man of peace" in the 1964 election, who misjudged the tenacity of the North Vietnamese and the determination of Moscow and Peking to risk a confrontation on a battlefield unfavorable to the United States.

No Compromise

It was simply inconceivable to Johnson that the North Vietnamese and the Viet Cong would not submit if (1) he put his air power over the battlefield, and then (2) put an American expeditionary force on the ground. And now, even Nixon, who is a less romantic and more pragmatic man, is still operating on the assumption that the enemy that would not compromise when we had over half a million soldiers on the ground and an even larger air force in the battle, will compromise when we are saying negotiate on our terms or we'll pull all our ground troops out anyway.

This says a lot about human faith and human patriotism, but even more about human ignorance, for Moscow and Peking will probably never have a better opportunity to confront the United States under more favorable circumstances, at so little cost to themselves, and with a Communist ally in Vietnam whose soldiers have more courage and endurance.

All this having been said, it is now apparently Hanoi's turn to demonstrate that its ignorance of America's psychology and America's politics is almost equal to American ignorance of theirs. They are supposed to be among the most patient people on earth, but they couldn't wait to let the logic of the American withdrawal from Vietnam work its way. They felt they could smash their way through the demilitarized zone, and defy the "understanding" they knew the U.S. expected, even if they had not agreed to it themselves, and destroy the South Vietnamese without the massive intervention of American air power in the North.

This was an assumption and a prejudgment of Washington as great as Kennedy's or Johnson's assumptions in the earlier phases of the war. Leave aside the wisdom or unwisdom of the bombing of Hanoi and Haiphong — the main point in both cases is that war is unpredictable, and Hanoi, like Washington, misjudged the reaction.

Hanoi is now misconceiving the United States in other ways. It apparently thinks it can influence the outcome of the American presidential election if it can embarrass and even humiliate President Nixon, but it would have to smash his Vietnamization policy all the way and destroy or scatter the Saigon forces to do that, and this would be such a humiliation for the President that the American voters might very well rally to his support and re-elect him.

LYNDON JOHNSON
... simply inconceivable

Hanoi's handling of the American prisoners of war is an even better illustration of its misjudgment of American psychology and its own best interests. Hanoi is trying to win the battle of American public opinion. It thinks the American people are sick of the war, which is right, and that they will act like the French people after Dienbienphu, which is wrong.

They seem to believe that holding the American prisoners is their trump card in winning their battle for American opinion, and forcing President Nixon to settle the war on their own terms, and one can understand their logic in historical terms.

Seldom, if ever, in the history of warfare have prisoners been released before the terms of peace have been arranged, but the Americans are funny people. They care more about the human problems than the political problems. And in the present situation, the guess here is that they will be more likely to get out of the war if the prisoners are released and safe conduct for the remaining 69,000 American soldiers is assured, than if Hanoi holds onto them as hostages and insists Nixon knuckle under to their demands.

The attempt by Hanoi to win a classic victory on the battlefield and compel a settlement by holding the prisoners is probably as great a blunder as Kennedy's or Johnson's efforts to win by power in the 1960s. The lesson of this war is that physical power has not worked for either side, and it is not going to end the conflict by bombing Hanoi or invading the demilitarized zone, or holding the prisoners for blackmail.

Better-Informed Families

The families of the American prisoners are now well-organized. They know better than anybody else that increasing the violence by a massive invasion of South Vietnam or by sending the B-52s against Hanoi and Haiphong is not going to settle anything, but keep their men in Hanoi's prisons.

If American opinion is Hanoi's objective — and it has been for a long time — its greatest opportunity is to release the American prisoners, not to the American Government, but to their families, and guarantee the safe exit of the last few thousand American soldiers.

These are really the popular objectives of the American people, not the defence of the Saigon Government, or the democratization of South Vietnam, or the future strategic configuration of Asia and the Pacific. But Hanoi, at the end of the war, has misjudged America, as Washington misjudged North Vietnam at the beginning. And this is the ultimate tragedy, for America is ready for a settlement, if the politicians on both sides will only give it back its prisoners and its soldiers.

Classical Music

In Victoria there are a large number of older citizens, and we do not have a "Quality Music" radio station like most of the major cities across Canada, not to mention European countries. Here we have three AM stations and one FM, and with the exception of the Times Good Music Hour on CJVI at 7 p.m. and the occasional good hour on the FM station we are forced to listen to "teenage pop music." Then, between every record, the disc jockies seem to turn into salesmen and have a competition to see who can shout the loudest to sell their products. The local stations could take an example from KXA Seattle 770 on the AM dial between 6 a.m. and 7 p.m. Or does everything today have to be geared to the young generation? — (Mrs.) T. Nielsen.

Boycott

I write with reference to your lead editorial of April 18 in which you laud the CBC for refusing to accept the B.C. Socred Government's money for spot advertising as a vehicle for party propaganda, by way of ostensible questions and answers.

I support your opposition to the government's ploy. However, I cannot agree with you that the public "will pay an estimated $200,000 ... to listen to Mr. Bennett's carefully prepared propaganda for his party."

Personally, I shall continue to listen to the CBC and boycott any station which carries this material. I am sure many others will do likewise, following independent, intelligent judgment.

Let the few who want to see the Socreds continue in office put up their money and get a receipt for advertising placed by the party. This is not a proper load on the taxpayer. — "Galiano Won't Listen"

Two Promises

Mr. Trudeau, you had a good governing run. Of your pre-election promises made two stand out in memory.

The first covered each and every problem in Canada. You called it "Justice." How can you better this slogan next time?

The second promise said: "The people will participate in government." You were not kidding. Your idea of participation is to pass enmeshing laws, and the people can participate afterwards, trying to get out of the maze. Perhaps this is where Mr. Stanfield can help.

Mr. Stanfield, you have bitterly opposed many acts of the Liberal government. Will you kindly publish a short list of those regulations you intend to abolish when elected? Please let us know in your platform that you plan removal of the 12 per cent tax on building materials. — Joe Pullen, Box 4, Errington, B.C.

Inside Richard Nixon: The Struggle of Two Men

By BRUCE MAZLISH

(Mazlish is professor of history at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and author of the forthcoming book, "In Search of Nixon: a Psychohistorical Inquiry." He wrote this analysis of Nixon's character for The Washington Post).

Americans have long been searching for Richard Nixon, for a guiding purpose behind his apparent contradictions, for the man behind the policies.

They are forever perplexed by his sudden turnabouts from cold war warrior to the Peking summit, from free-market economics to the wage-price freeze. Just as they think they have hit him in their sights, Richard Nixon is off again on another spree of ambivalence.

There is, for some reason, a great reluctance to accept the fact that a central characteristic of the man is ambivalence itself. After all, ambivalence — conflicting feelings toward an object or idea, love-hate impulses and the like — is a trait found in most people; what is extraordinary is only the degree to which it is present in the president.

Gladden Freudians

To understand Richard Nixon, then, one must look to the sources of his particular ambivalences, to his childhood and youth, and, especially to his parents. There, in a manner to gladden the heart of any Freudian analyst, can be found the origins of an unusually mixed combative and peaceful nature.

Nixon's mother was a Quaker, devoted to peace. His father was a "Bible-pounding" Methodist, temporarily converted to Quakerism at the time of his marriage but relapsing later, and taking young Richard with him.

Overlooked by almost all commentators is the fact that the day after Richard entered high school, his father took him and his two brothers to Los Angeles to attend the revival meetings conducted by Chicago evangelist Paul Rader. As Mr. Nixon tells it in Billy Graham's magazine, Decision: "We joined hundreds of others that night in making our personal commitments to Christ and Christian service."

The father, Frank Nixon, was also notorious for his temper and irritability. And to complicate matters further, it was the peaceful mother who seemed "strong," and the competitive father who because of his lack of success, especially financial success, seemed "weak." It is little wonder that Richard became unusually ambivalent.

By the time he was 12, Richard had decided to follow the inspiration of his father, who loved to argue and debate. He would become a "lawyer who couldn't be bought."

From this decision, it was only a short step to entering, as Mr. Nixon himself put it, the "warfare of politics." It was a step that greatly saddened his mother, though his volunteering for the navy in the Second World War, contrary to Quaker principles, had already prepared her for the blow and for his future vocation.

The rest of the background is familiar to anyone who has followed Nixon's career to the presidency. The competitive, fighting "Tricky Dicky," enamored of "strength" and "strong men," is a person we know well.

This is the Nixon who speaks with contempt of the weak, self-indulgent students — those "bums" — and contrasts them with the brave soldiers who "stand tall" in Vietnam. This is the Nixon who wants as advisers "people that are strong, people who aren't panicking . . . Somebody who brings serenity, calmness or strength into the room": a John Newton Mitchell, who is "strong," seemingly imperturable, free of doubts, advocating a "get tough" policy: a Spiro Agnew, picked it seems partly because he impressed Nixon at first sight as somebody who was sure of himself, who was without weakness, who's "got it;" and a John Connally, the latest addition to the president's circle of "strong men."

(Though Nixon does not mention it, he appears also to need "weaker" men, such as his friend, Robert Finch, in fact, Nixon's view of his cabinet, with the recent exception of Connally, seems not to allow for "strong" men there. Such balancing of strong and weak corresponds with Nixon's own ambivalence.) In short, this is the Richard Nixon who, desperately afraid that the United States will appear "a pitiful, helpless giant," drops bombs on Vietnam and strikes bold and warlike postures.

Bad Conscience

Less known, however, is the Nixon who has an "obsession" with peace, to use his own word. His identification with his mother in this matter, though not as obvious, is as strong as with his father's pugnacity. My speculation is that it leaves him with a bad conscience about his aggressiveness.

But more to our point here, it also endows him with a sincere dedication to international peace.

Pacifist and Warrior Locked Togetehr

From his entrance into politics as a congressman representing an isolationist district, Nixon surprisingly showed himself an internationalist in orientation. Thus, he worked on the Herter committee, whose report led to the Marshall Plan, and considered this the most important service of his congressional career. In 1940, he supported Wendell Willkie; as he later labeled himself, he was a "whole-worlder."

In the 1940s and '50s, of course, internationalism was connected for many Americans with anti-communism; e.g., the Marshall Plan was to save Western Europe from the communists. It is this fact that has tended to obscure Nixon's sincere commitment to peace. I believe we catch the true flavor of his feelings on the matter in an unusually candid statement he made to Walter Cronkite in 1960:

"Well, my major interest ever since I came to Washington, and long before that, has been in the field of foreign policy and of foreign affairs . . . The reason that, to me, the overriding issue of our times is foreign affairs, is where it comes right out of my whole background. I indicated, for example, that my mother is a Quaker. She is a very good one. I am not as good. But, from the time that I can remember, I know that she and my grandmother, her mother who lived to be 93, used to talk about their 'concern,' which is a Quaker way of expressing it, for building a better life not only for people in this country but for people everywhere. This humanitarian approach to the problems of the world, an approach, incidentally, which they have, my mother and my grandmother, more in their character than I have, but which I certainly have acquired from them to an extent; this is something that I think has affected my whole attitude toward public service generally."

Nixon then concludes, "and, as I see the responsibilities for the next president . . . his major role will be to attempt to make a contribution toward building a world peace, with freedom for all people." I am prepared to believe Nixon when he says he has "an obsession on this point."

At this juncture, other "obsessions" swing into action. For example, a few weeks before the interview with Cronkite, Nixon said, "I think that we can have peace. I think that we can keep our own freedom, and I think that we can win the struggle against slavery and for freedom throughout the world . . ."

Characteristically, we have the usual Nixon division into all good and all bad, slavery and freedom, aggressor and peace-loving one worlder. It is these opposing tendencies in his personality that lead to confusion of thought and often murky speeches difficult for the public to decipher.

Deny His Pugnacity

What compounds the problem at this point, moreover, is Nixon's compelling necessity to deny his aggressive and combative feeling. Standing as we do on the eve of his visit to Moscow in May, we might recall with profit his earlier visit, and his kitchen debate with then Premier Nikita Khrushchev.

Nixon's version of the discussion is given in his book, Six Crises. Khrushchev, he tells us, "does not need to be convinced of our good intentions. He knows we are not aggressors and do not threaten the security of the Soviet Union." Again, "it was my belief that Khrushchev knew that our intentions were peaceful."

The fact that the Russians might remember the American intervention in the Russian civil war, the American willingness, in part, to have Germany invade Russia, and other matters was all written off by Nixon as merely an "act" on Khrushchev's part. In this denial of his own aggressive intent, and this refusal to recognize his opponent's real fears, Nixon seems at one with much of America's recent self-image.

Such a statement must be placed in the context of Nixon's parental models: the mother who did not wish him to enter the "warfare of politics," and the father with "his fierce competitive drive."

Is it any wonder that Richard Nixon has a problem making a decision to fight, to release his competitive drive, and that he feels a letdown, as his account of his crises informs us, after the semi-forbidden impulses have been unleashed?

But having indicated Nixon's ambivalence in this matter, we must note that he did, indeed, gain strength from his difficulties. Like his Russian foes, he learned to "steel" himself, and to reject the softer, debilitating, and feminine impulses that threaten him so fearfully — for the simple reason that they are so strongly contained within him. Out of "weakness," then, Nixon can be said to have drawn "strength."

Is such personal "strength," however good for the cause of peace? Nixon, we must remember, like so many of his generation, is a cold war warrior. Cognitively, he remembers that appeasement led to the Second World War.

As he recalls telling the protesting students in his predawn visit to the Lincoln Memorial after Kent State, "I know it is awfully hard to keep this in perspective. I told them that in 1938 I thought Neville Chamberlain was the greatest man living and Winston Churchill was a madman. It was not until years later that I realized Neville Chamberlain was a good man but Winston Churchill was right."

The cognitive knowledge fits perfectly with Nixon's personal feelings about being strong. As he told Cronkite, "I think the way . . . to have peace is to be strong and be prepared to resist those who threaten peace." It also fits with his fierce conviction about competitiveness: peace is something that must be "won."

For Richard Nixon the great danger is that he and America will appear impotent, will go "soft," will allow themselves to be "humiliated."

Thus peace for Nixon can only be won by a kind of "warfare": He and the United States must show itself strong. Since peace, however, is generally secured through realistic compromise, at least where military victory is absent, the compulsive need to appear strong can often hamper meaningful negotiations.

Needs an Enemy

China, at least at the moment, appears to allow Nixon a balance between his ambivalences, and thus a chance to assert the pragmatic considerations of power politics along with his peaceful desires.

The combative side of Nixon, however, with its constant need for an enemy on whom to load his negative feelings, has figured unduly in his attitudes toward India and Bangladesh, "tilting" him against them.

Will he also require the Soviet Union as such an opponent? Only time, and the results of the Moscow trip in May, will help us to answer this question.

THE LAST POST

(From an earlier article which appeared in the St. John's Alternate Press).

Some of the more important issues on which last October's Newfoundland election campaign was fought were absent from the province's second campaign in five months. One of these was Joey Smallwood, now without a House of Assembly seat for the first time since 1949. Another was the government's option to buy the giant Bowaters paper mill in Corner Brook.

New premier Frank Moores cancelled the option and the studies which had been ordered to test the feasibility of a government takeover of the plant soon after taking office in January, and dismissed the plan as nothing more than a "political gimmick." He said a PC government "would not go in and disrupt reputable companies with world-wide respected reputations."

Thus ended a controversy that had lasted since August, when Bowaters officials informed the provincial government that they were planning to close down their 100,000-ton-a-year Number Seven mill in November, putting 350 mill employees and about 800 loggers out of work.

Security Lost

The announcement shook Corner Brook, Newfoundland's second city, to its roots. For many workers and families, it meant that the security they had known since Bowaters — the city's only industrial employer — had first moved there in the twenties was gone.

Hit only slightly less hard was then premier Smallwood, about to face a tough battle for re-election. Meeting company and public officials in Corner Brook the next day, he lashed out at the multinational Bowater empire for favouring its other mills over its Newfoundland operation.

"I suspect that this mill is paying toll, tribute, cash to the international Bowaters Corporation," he said. He asked for, and later received, a three-month option from the company to purchase their Newfoundland assets, valued at near $100 million.

Many shared Smallwood's suspicions that the Corner Brook mill was not keeping up with technological change, that Bowaters were giving priority to the other mills in the United States to supply the North American market, and that they were generally neglecting the Corner Brook operation. Paper makers charged that the company failed to keep up with changing technology, and that the Number Seven machine was obsolete from the day it was bought.

'Be Sensible'

Both party leaders realized the seriousness of the Corner Brook situation, at least in political and election terms. Moores called on the Liberals to "end this approach (the proposed takeover) and handle Newfoundland's problems in a sensible way."

On October 2, a meeting between provincial cabinet ministers and Bowater brass solidified the deal. A nine-month option to purchase the Bowater assets was given the provincial government for $200,000 (with 75 per cent of that returning to the government if and when the purchase is made).

"We will not allow it to fold," said Smallwood during the crisis, echoing Newfoundlanders' fear of 'losing' industry at any cost. "We intend to keep it going if it is the last thing we do."

But nationalize? Not quite. The mill would be bought by the government and run by a crown croporation. But, said the premier, "I don't think that a crown corporation would operate the mill indefinitely. It might be wise to wait for markets to improve, as they will, before turning it back to private enterprise."

What was termed 'nationalization' of the Bowater property was nothing more than a promised temporary takeover in the heat of an election. The government bails out the failing industry when the profits are sinking, re-establishes it, and then hands it back to the capitalist to let him start making his profits again.

They Were Naive

The reaction to the takeover by labor leaders, journalists and politicians was twofold. On the one hand they were rightly suspicious of Smallwood's motives in the matter. On the other, they were naive toward their economic benefactor.

"The announcement (of the proposed takeover) . . . raises many fears as it's always questionable whether the government can run industry as efficiently as private enterprise," wrote the head of the local pulp and paper union. His questioning was echoed by editorials in the largest provincial daily newspapers.

Bowaters was exonerated, the government solution itself was the target for the criticism. Perhaps it was because of the people's old attitude of fearing to bite the hand of the industry that meagrely feeds them.

The Bowater operation began in 1925, nineteen years after the first Newfoundland mill at Grand Falls started production. Bowaters had to be bailed out of bankruptcy in the thirties.

"The concessions granted the two companies were unique in North America," writes Richard Gwyn in his book on Smallwood. They paid no stumpage fees on company-owned land, undertook no conservation or reforestation, and paid virtually no taxes to the provincial government."

Instead of taxes, Bowaters paid the province $150,000 a year. By contrast, in the first year after Newfoundland entered Confederation, the company paid $3.5 million in Canadian corporation tax to the federal government.

The Bowater operation in Newfoundland is worth $100 million; it owns the Bowater power company and has timber rights to 11,000 square miles of Newfoundland — more than one quarter of the island.

28,000 Employees

Bowaters Newfoundland is part of a huge international England - based empire established in a dozen countries, employing more than 28,000 people, and with its own fleet of ships. Its assets are in the neighborhood of half a billion dollars. Its North American empire, started at Corner Brook, accounts for half those assets, including the largest newsprint mill in the United States, in Tennessee, opened in 1954 and producing 430,000 tons of newsprint a year.

Bowaters closed its machine on December 31, putting 350 men out of work. Though an upswing in markets this year is being predicted by the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association in its report released in January, Bowaters Newfoundland has no plans to restart and rehire.

And through it all, the company's image was hardly tarnished.

Air Canada DC-9 jets will start using Victoria airport Sunday

VICTORIA JOINS JET AGE

Victoria enters the jet age on Sunday when Air Canada will inaugurate DC-9 Douglas jets on a daily run to Calgary and then on to points further east.

This major step also heralds eventually all-jet service out of Victoria and the phasing out of the 17-year-old turbo-prop Viscounts which Air Canada uses for the daily hops to and from Vancouver.

S. G. Mooney, district Air Canada manager, said Wednesday that the Viscounts will be replaced this time next year with DC-9s.

The new jet run from here to Calgary-Regina-Winnipeg is part of Air Canada's expanded summer schedule, which goes into effect Sunday, and it replaces the direct Viscount daily run to Calgary, which was successfully started a year and a half ago.

CUT TIME

The jet will cut flying time down 50 minutes from the present run of one hour and 55 minutes to Calgary. And it will be able to carry 94 passengers — almost twice as many than the Viscount can handle.

Mooney said if the jet run is well-patronized "it will continue on a year-round basis and will be the beginning of "all sorts of goodies", like, for instance, use of the larger DC-8, and direct runs to other cities.

TRIAL RUNS

With passenger business gradually increasing and with the coming of the jet age here, the department of transport is studying the possibility of expanding airport building facilities although "nothing is imminent", Mooney said.

Trial jet runs around the Victoria airport area by Air Canada and "mainly" CP Air aroused many complaints about noise from North Saanich and Sidney residents, but Mooney anticipated that with the jet run coming in daylight hours "there should be little trouble."

After June 1, the new jet run will be extended to Montreal.

Westbound, the flight will arrive in Victoria at 10:35 a.m. PDT and depart at 12:25 p.m.

Fares will be the same as if the passenger were travelling through Vancouver, Mooney said.

In its new summer schedule, Air Canada will increase its daily Viscount flights from Victoria to Vancouver from five to nine, in addition to the four Pacific Western Airlines flights to Vancouver. PWA serves Seattle as well with four flights daily.

NO BUYERS

Mooney said Air Canada has yet to find any buyers for the 36 Viscounts it will phase out from the short runs in various areas of the country. PWA, which uses Convairs in its flights out of Victoria, is not interested in purchasing the Viscounts, he said.

Air Canada, then TCA, inaugurated air service between Victoria and Vancouver in 1943, using 10 Lockheed aircraft on a one-flight per day basis. In 1946, DC-3s replaced the Lockheed planes and were making 16 flights per day by 1960. In 1961, the now-doomed Viscounts were introduced here.

Russians Negative to U.S. Films

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Two visiting intellectuals from the Soviet Union say they are put back by the violence of American motion pictures. The two commented on two movies, the French Connection and The Godfather.

"I saw more blood spilled on the screen than I've ever seen before in my life," said Gennadi Fedosov, secretary-general of the Institute of Soviet-American Relations.

"The reaction of the audience was very foreign and hard to understand. Somebody would be shot in the face, and there would be an uproar of laughter or applause sometimes."

"We don't have the way of showing the dead on film that you have," commented Yuri Oleshchuk of the Institute of the United States of America.

"Maybe I am not used to such pictures," said Oleschuk, "but my first reaction was negative."

Should Tenants Vote? Yes, Most Officials Agree

Now that Vancouver has led the way, other B.C. municipalities should be allowed to grant tenants the right to vote on money issues.

With one or two exceptions, that is the view of Greater Victoria's municipal leaders, who said today they feel it is high time provincial legislation was changed to give tenants this right.

There was a general indication from those interviewed that the matter would come up in their respective councils over the next few months, with demands for action from the provincial government to amend the Municipal Act.

VANCOUVER CHANGED

Vancouver, which took the approving action Tuesday, was enabled to do so by the legislature March 30 in an amendment to the city's charter. It is the only administration in the province with the authority to make such a change.

Tenants' organization have pressed the provincial government to allow tenants the right to vote on money matters, claiming that denial of this privilege turns them into "second-class citizens."

In Victoria, about 55 per cent of the population of nearly 61,000 is estimated to be tenants. Mayor Peter Pollen said withholding the right to vote from such a large number of residents is "an obvious disparity."

SIGNED DECLARATION

Asked if he would favor following Vancouver's example, he said: "I'm all for it. But I would like to see us explore the possibility of having some sort of permanent voters' list, to save people the bother of having to register each year."

Property owners are automatically placed on the voters' list. "Resident electors," which means people who rent homes or apartments, must sign a declaration which has to be renewed each year.

There are 17,534 owner electors," which means people resident electors. Postal authorities' figures give the number of homes in the city as 13,683, while suites and apartments total 12,406.

Victoria Ald. Alf Hood said the number of tenants on the list is "deplorably small," and added he would like to see every effort made to encourage more to register.

With tenants becoming more and more numerous, he agreed that they should be allowed the right to vote on money matters, but perhaps with certain qualifications.

THREE YEARS

Ald. Bill Tindall said he was not opposed to granting tenants this right, but one qualification he would like to see is the requirement that tenants must have been resident in the area for at least three years before being allowed to vote.

Saanich Mayor Hugh Curtis said: "We are moving increasingly to a position where there should be no attempt to differentiate between the property owner and the tenant, because clearly the tenant is paying tax—through rents.

"But there should be some residence requirement. Many tenants remain in a particular home or apartment for many years and have a stake in the community. We too often tend to refer to the tenant as an unreliable transient."

Vancouver's move was described as a "good step" by Saanich Ald. Frank Waring, who said: "So many more of our people are living in apartments today you have to include them as citizens of the area.

"Naturally, any tax changes are going to be reflected ultimately in rents they pay," which he felt entitles renters to a vote on matters involving the raising of funds.

But Ald. Leslie Passmore of Saanich was solidly opposed.

"When a money bylaw is put up and application is made to borrow, the heading is always on the basis of assessment and debt in the municipality. The property owner is putting up his collateral for borrowing.

"The renter isn't doing that. All he has to do when rents go up is give a month's notice and pull out.

"The property owner can't do that. He's stuck with the debt."

Oak Bay's Mayor Frances Elford says she has thought for a long time that tenants should be allowed a vote.

She points out that the amendment to the Municipal Act that allows tenants to run for office makes this a "logical step."

"They can run for office and become a major or alderman and so be in a position to make decisions on the spending of vast sums of money. It is perfectly logical that they should have a vote on money matters."

Ald Shirley Dowell concurs: "People who can't afford to build or buy a home through no fault of their own have a stigma put on them when they're denied a vote on money issues."

Ald. Douglas McLelland said, "Because so much depends on local conditions, a local option clause should be included in any amendment to the Municipal Act so that each municipality could exercise its authority as Vancouver has."

Esquimalt Mayor Art Young says he "couldn't agree more" that tenants be given the vote. "We (Esquimalt) recommended this to the Union of B.C. Municipalities last year but it was turned down by, I think, a very small margin."

Esquimalt Ald. Terry Prentice says a vote on money matters for tenants largely depends on the answer to two questions:

"They're certainly paying taxes through rents but is it in the same proportion as taxes levied on the individual homeowner?

"Also, do tenants feel the same responsibility toward the municipality as homeowners?"

Clean Up—Or Else

The pollution control branch has threatened to revoke the effluent permit of a Millstream Road landfill operation if its activities are not cleaned up by next week.

The warning was given two weeks ago to Glen Raymond, operator of Millstream Landfill, 2015 Millstream.

A pollution control branch spokesman said today a dike overflow had gone unchecked, and the effluent was polluting Millstream Creek.

An examination by inspectors will probably be made before the deadline is up next week, but Raymond has already told officials he has corrected the problem, the spokesman said.

$149 Million Spent In Initiative Grants

OTTAWA (CP) — Groups sought more than three times as much as the government handed out in the $149-million Local Initiatives Program, a federal program to stimulate employment.

Commons questions by New Democrats John Burton (Regina East) and David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) turned up the news Wednesday that about $483 million in assistance was sought.

Manpower Minister Bryce Mackasey also informed them that 5,699 of the 17,736 project applications, both private and municipal, were accepted.

Allocation for funds was tied to unemployment in the provinces and adjusted to reflect factors such as native population.

Projects approved and estimated cost: Newfoundland, 400, $9.9 million; Nova Scotia 430, $10.4 million; Prince Edward Island 114, $2 million; New Brunswick 385, $9.2 million; Quebec 1,979, $62.7 million; Ontario 1,007, $22.2 million; Manitoba 201, $5.4 million, Saskatchewan 174, $4 million; Alberta 310, $8 million; British Columbia 642, $13.7 million; Northwest Territories 35, $1 million; Yukon 22, $428,000.

Dynamite Not Traced

RCMP said today the 20 sticks were not part of the three cases of dynamite stolen from a MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. logging operation seven miles south of Port Hardy on Saturday.

Police said the bomb had been placed in a five-foot square vault which serves as access for inspecting underground power cables serving the mine and mill.

It had not detonated, apparently because of a faulty fuse.

Socred MLA Testifies Sun Report Fair

Times News Services

VANCOUVER — Social Credit MLA Alex Fraser testified that a Sun article concerning a February, 1971, meeting of the legislature's public accounts committee was a "fair and accurate report of what took place at the meeting."

The testimony was given by Fraser during the second day of a hearing in which Premier Bennett's sons are claiming that the article by Iain Hunter was libellous.

The Cariboo member was asked his opinion of Hunter.

"As far as I am concerned, I always felt that Iain, in his reporting of the legislature, did one of the better jobs among members of the press gallery," the witness said.

Cross-examined by McEachern, the MLA agreed that he did not interpret Dowding's allegations as being a specific attack against the premier's sons.

Fraser said he interpreted the allegations to be an attack against the provincial government or, secondly, against the premier and his stores.

Ernie Lecours, Social Credit MLA for Richmond, testified he was also present at the meeting and agreed with the evidence given by Fraser.

Another Social Credit MLA, Burt Campbell of Revelstoke-Slocan, testified that he, too, was at the meeting, and that Dowding, after mentioning Bennett stores later appeared to "backtrack," referring only to a hardware store in the Okanagan.

Earlier, William Bennett, younger son of the premier, told court that he is seeking damages from the Sun big enough to show the public the degree to which the newspaper had libelled him and his brother, Russell.

He made the comment when Peter Butler, counsel for the evening newspaper, suggested that his main purpose in bringing an action was to maintain his honorable name.

The Bennett brothers, along with Bennett Co. Ltd., are suing the Sun; Pacific Press Ltd., owner of the newspaper; Sun publisher Stuart Keate and managing editor William Galt for libel.

Butler suggested that Bennett's primary purpose in bringing the case was to maintain his standing in the community and his honorable name.

Allan McEachern, counsel for the Bennetts, immediately objected that this wasn't the issue before the court.

McEachern said the question had been asked in order to minimize any damages which might be awarded by showing that the plaintiffs' main interest was in preserving a good name and not necessarily in obtaining damages.

He said:

"They are hoping to get a paltry damage award. My submission is that the plaintiffs should receive a substantial award so the public will know what damage they have suffered."

William Bennett testified Tuesday that his reputation as a businessman remains damaged as a result of the Sun story, which quoted questions raised by New Democratic Party MLA Gordon Dowding.

Bennett also said his business and family relations have suffered as a result of the story.

He said he and his brother manage three hardware stores owned by their parents in the interior B.C. cities of Kelowna, Penticton and Vernon. He said they have continued a policy established by their father of not selling merchandise to the government or any of its agencies.

In answering Butler's question Wednesday about the reason behind the libel suit, William Bennett said that he understands that the size of a settlement would, in the public mind, "show the degree of libel and the higher the award the more it will show how they have libelled me."

Butler: "You're saying the bigger the award, the more the public will think you have been damaged?"

Bennett: "That is how they will interpret it."

Earlier, Butler questioned Bennett about his contention that the story published by the Sun had affected his relationship with his wife.

Butler: "If you said something was not so, she would believe it?"

Bennett: "I think so."

Bennett agreed that his wife had seen the apology for the article which the Sun published two days later, but said his children did not see it.

Butler then said: "I suggest to you, you have not been brought into public scandal by this article?"

McEachern objected on the ground that this was a matter for argument in law, and he, Butler and the judge discussed the various terms used in the Libel Act and their lay meanings. Butler finally was allowed to ask:

★ ★ ★

"Has anyone come up to you and shown scorn or hatred"

Bennett: "In the relative sense, it has possibly happened. It can happen in so many different ways."

Butler: "You felt you became hated?"

Bennett: "I feel that if there are people who want to believe it they will."

Reporter Hunter testified he had filed his story to the Sun the same day as the meeting, Feb. 17.

"I didn't hear any more about the matter until the next day, when the premier got up in the House and made a statement.

"I learned then that Dowding was going around saying he was raising a hypothetical question (at the committee meeting) and that I had misinterpreted what he said.

"That was the first time I knew about any lawsuits," Hunter said.

Under questioning he agreed that mentioning the Bennett brothers in the article was an "interpolation" on his part.

JUDGE ORDERS FALLERS BACK

VANCOUVER (CP) — Judge A. A. MacKoff, in B.C. Supreme Court chambers, granted an injunction Wednesday ordering crews of Canadian Forest Products Ltd. Englewood Division on Vancouver Island back to work.

The judge rejected a claim by lawyer Terry Robertson that the master International Woodworkers of America agreement that binds B.C. coast loggers "does not exist as far as fallers and buckers are concerned."

Similar injunctions were also granted against fallers and buckers at the Crown Zellerbach Canada Ltd. operation at Courtenay, Weldwood of Canada Ltd. at Squamish and the B.C. Forest Products Ltd. operation at Pitt Lake.

The new BRITISH LEYLAND Austin Marina:
it owes a lot to our BRITISH LEYLAND taxi, tank, sports car, bus, limousine...

For $2495,* the new Austin Marina offers you a combination of qualities you won't find in any other small car: Japanese, German or domestic.
Because they just don't have this kind of breeding.

DEPENDABLE: the same 365 day-a-year dependability British Leyland builds into the London cab, British Leyland builds into the new Marina.
The new Austin Marina is a car you can count on at all times. The 1800 cc MGB engine is one of the most successful and well-proved power units in the world. The little servicing it should ever require is easily and inexpensively performed. For dependable starts in the worst winter we've fitted an extra heavy-duty battery and alternator, and a pre-engaged starter as part of a 7-point Cold Climate Package. Reliability will go hand in hand with economy in your new Austin Marina—whether you choose the Deluxe Coupe, Super Deluxe Sedan or GT.

DURABLE: that's how British Leyland builds the Scorpion tank—and the new Marina.
Not only does the Marina's unitary construction bodyshell meet safety regulations for crash tests, it offers an exceptional degree of torsional rigidity and strength. And to make sure the Marina keeps on looking good all its long life, we've taken a good hard look at that scourge of Canadian motoring, rust. Some people simply dip into this problem. We immerse the Marina in Electrocoat primer. Then seal in this protection with deep gloss paint. And because we believe it's an essential in Canada, we undercoat every Marina as a standard procedure—something not all our competitors can say.

PERFORMANCE: that's what British Leyland's MG sports cars are all about. British Leyland's new Marina is fast off its mark, too.
One of the most responsive small cars on the road today, the Marina's 1800 cc MGB engine comes direct from the sports car of the same illustrious name and speeds you from 0-50 mph in only 9.5 seconds. In standard form, the Marina's 4-speed stick-shift comes from our Triumph sports cars. Well suited to long hauls on highways, the Marina's rack-and-pinion steering and torsion bar suspension are part of a handling and performance package that makes for great road holding. Naturally, front power disc brakes and radial ply tires are standard—which they aren't on most cars.

LUXURIOUS: that's the only word for British Leyland's Jaguar XJ6. It also applies to British Leyland's new Marina.
The new Marinas are good-looking cars with fashionably clean lines that aren't going to go out of fashion. Now look inside. On all models you will find all the luxury you ever wanted in a car, including—wall-to-wall carpeting, flow-through ventilation, face-level fresh-air vents, 2-speed windshield wipers, comprehensive sound deadening—and very sensibly, a really efficient 2-speed heater and defroster, custom built for Canada. The Marina also features a finger-tip control system mounted on the steering column, which allows for such conveniences as a single wipe of the windshield, a single flash of the headlights. To call the Marina a well equipped car is a real understatement—even by British standards. We know of no comparable line with so many features as standard.

You can't help but make yourself comfortable in the new Marina. For example, on all models the front seats provide excellent orthopaedic support. Each is wider than those in other cars in the Marina's class, and a full 3" wider than one leading import. The rear seat is more generous too, a full foot wider than a popular North American small car. And there's plenty of leg room too, even if you're a 6-foot football star. There is 13.0 cu. ft. of usable trunk space in the Marina Super Deluxe Sedan—and 11.5 cu. ft. in the Deluxe Coupe and GT. That's almost double the trunk space in that same North American small car!

Breeding you can't buy in any other car.

Choose from three models: 2-door Deluxe Coupe and 4-door Super Deluxe Sedan (both available with Borg-Warner automatic transmission) and 2-door GT. *Manufacturer's suggested retail price for the Deluxe Coupe, Halifax, Montreal, Burlington, Vancouver. Any provincial sales tax, license and transportation costs are extra. The new Austin Marina is backed by five Canadian parts depots and a coast-to-coast dealer network.

Buying a car. We've got a better way.

All you need is your down payment. Nothing more.

Buying a car is exciting. But what's the best way to pay for it? Before you buy, see if you don't think the IAC Car Purchase Plan is the safer, sensible, better way. For one thing, no collateral like pledged insurance policies, savings accounts, bonds. No strings. With IAC you just trade in your present car or make your down payment, your salesman will work out the monthly payment that's most convenient for you, and you drive away. Neat and easy. And safe.

How convenient can you get?

You go to the car dealership of your choice. Pick out the model you want. Pick out the accessories. And in minutes your salesman will work out the payment details with you. Then you drive home and impress the neighbours. That's all.

Worry. Who needs it?

We've tried to eliminate as much complication and worry from buying a car as possible. For example, you don't have to put up any collateral because you haven't actually borrowed money, so you're still free to borrow should you need to. If an emergency or opportunity pops up, you can move quickly, getting the money you need immediately.

Life insurance* is included for you at no extra cost.

And to really put you at your ease, you can ask for our Payment Protector Plan.* If you have an accident or get sick and can't work, we'll make your payments for you. You keep the car—and get well fast.

We're in business to make it easier and safer for you.

Financing is our business. We started about 45 years ago with the very simple thought that there must be a convenient and safe way for just about everyone to own a car. As a result, thousands of Canadians have used our plan—again and again—simply because it is what we promise: safe, convenient, sensible.

Your car dealer knows all about it. No wonder.

Your salesman will probably suggest you finance your new car the IAC way. (If he doesn't, just ask.) Either way, he knows all about it. Which isn't surprising when you consider that chances are the dealer is financing his complete inventory of cars through an IAC plan. That's how good the IAC way is.

Mount St. Mary Hospital To Get $500,000 Renovation

The Capital regional hospital board Wednesday approved a $500,000 renovation plan for Mount St. Mary Hospital, called by Saanich Mayor Hugh Curtis "the best possible bargain."

The hospital, at 999 Burdett, was opened by the Sisters of St. Ann in 1941 and has 128 patients who are chronically ill and mostly elderly.

Curtis noted that at one time it was thought the hospital would have to be phased out and the 128 beds lost in a location where they are badly needed.

He and Oak Bay Mayor Frances Elford noted the beds were being saved and brought up to standard at a great saving over the cost of new beds. Everyone involved in planning the renovation deserves congratulations, Curtis said.

The renovations will add only three new beds, for a total 131, but will modernize nursing, patient care and dietary facilities.

The project still requires approval of the provincial government through the B.C. Hospital Insurance Service but it was a BCHIS team which prepared the cost estimates.

If approved, the province will pay 60 per cent and regional ratepayers the balance through long-term financing. Ratepayers have already approved the borrowing in a referendum four years ago.

In other business, the regional hospital board:

— approved in principle acquiring a $32,000 argon laser photocoagulator and locating it at Queen Victoria Hospital. Eye doctors have estimated 400 patients a year can be treated with the laser for repair of detached and torn retinas and proliferating blood vessels at the back of the eye.

— tabled for further study proposed guidelines on spending of so-called "quarter-mill funds," a fund used in the past to meet some planning costs and unanticipated hospital costs.

— authorized, after debate, spending of up to $4,000 by the advisory board on a three-day effort to co-ordinate a variety of hospital reports and studies and produce recommendations for the regional board.

Regional directors were told Wednesday it was most unlikely anything like $4,000 would be spent on the effort. But funds were needed so the two doctors on the advisory board could be recompensed for having to pay other doctors to take care of their practices for three days. A $500 printing bill was anticipated.

The other four members of the advisory board are hospital administrators and it is not expected their employers will ask for compensation.

The board was reminded that advisory board members donate a half-day each week plus "many hours" to advise regional hospital directors on technical matters.

KEY FOR INDIANS: DIGNITY

LOGAN, UTAH (AP) — Indian actor Dan George said Wednesday the Indian will enter the white society only when he can do so with dignity.

The 72-year-old North Vancouver actor, who appeared in Little Big Man, spoke during Utah State University's Indian Week.

"My pity I can do without," George said. "My manhood I cannot. I shall come in dignity or I shall not come at all," George said.

He said that the Indian people are "adrift in this new age, but are not a part of it."

The Indian did not have time to adapt to the white society, George said. "We didn't have to take our 20th century progress and eat it a little at a time. We were force-fed and our stomach turned sick."

George said that the Indian needs special help and counseling so that he can succeed.

"It is hard for me to understand a culture which spends more on war and weapons than for education and welfare," George said. He said that in the Indian culture, love and respect for each other is taught in the communal home.

Regional Board Plans Office Lease

Capital Regional District board directors agreed in a closed-session Wednesday to lease two floors in the 76-year-old Leiser building at 524 Yates, subject to details being worked out.

The lease will be drawn "in escrow," taking effect once certain renovations of the old building are made.

The district's present offices are in Burnes House, Bastion Square, and the lease runs out next April.

A non-profit foundation has been formed to administer renovations and subsequent operation of the building.

The Leiser building served Eaton's as a warehouse until about two years ago. It is owned by Nelson Scalbania of Vancouver who has indicated he is willing to sell.

Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen said the foundation, as yet without a name, will begin arrangements to purchase the building. Renovations will cost about $150,000. He said a "quite substantial" amount of money has been donated by individuals for purchase of the building.

The regional board now occupies about 6,000 square feet at $4.25 a square foot in Bastion Square and would lease 12,000 square feet at $3 a square foot on the upper two floors of the Leiser building.

Lab Checks LSD Coffee

WEST VANCOUVER (CP) — Police here were still waiting Wednesday night for the official lab report on coffee — believed "laced" with the hallucinatory drug LSD — that sent two persons to hospital for treatment and another five persons home from West Vancouver secondary school Tuesday.

School counsellor Florence Rowell and student Diane Gunderson, 16, were released from hospital after treatment.

The other five affected by the coffee were vice-principal Bernard Holt, business manager John Howarth, counsellor Dorothy Brown and secretaries Ivean Davis and Dorothy Precious. All had drunk coffee from the staff machine.

'Disaster Area'

TISDALE, Sask. (CP) — The Armley and Ridgedale districts of Northeastern Saskatchewan are asking to be declared natural disaster areas due to spring flooding, the Tisdale area co-ordinator of the Emergency Measures Organization said Tuesday.

The two districts are southwest of the town of Carrot River where sandbag dikes have been thrown up around the hospital to hold back swollen Emmons Creek. However, C. W. Hendrickson, administrator of the hospital, said there appeared to be no immediate danger.

Who Calls Dam Shots?

Resources Minister Ray Williston's claims that public pressure could force construction of the Moran Dam indicates there is a conflict in the Social Credit Party and if so "it should be out in the open", NDP Leader Dave Barrett said Wednesday.

Barrett was referring to comments made Tuesday by Williston in which he said that public pressure may force construction of the dam if agreement can't be reached to build three dams on tributaries of the Fraser River to control spring flooding.

Williston said that dams on the tributaries would give virtually no return on an investment of $1 billion, while the Moran Dam would pay dividends in the form of power.

Barrett pointed out Williston's statement was in conflict with a statement made in the House by Premier Bennett that the Moran Dam would not be built.

"Who is calling the shots on this issue, Bennett or Williston?" Barrett asked. "If Bennett is backing down, this means there is a fight and it should be out in the open."

Barrett also disagreed sharply with the $1 billion figure for building the tributary dikes as quoted by Williston.

"There is no question of that much money being involved," he said.

Barrett suggested that Williston's comments might have been a ploy to "divert public attention away from moves on the Stikine River.

He was referring to an order in council Tuesday which imposed a mineral reserve on sections of the Stikine and Iskut rivers in northern B.C., which are being eyed by dam builders.

The reserves mean that any company or individual who stakes claims in the area does so with the knowledge that there will be no compensation from the government in case of subsequent flooding.

Parkland Tours Set for Weekend

People who want to know the names of the plants of Thetis Lake Park, as well as other things pertaining to nature's ways, will have an opportunity Saturday and Sunday to find the answers by taking part in conducted tours of park nature trails.

Sponsored by the 700-member Thetis Lake Sanctuary Association, the tours start on both days at 2:30 p.m. from the parking lot.

The guides are knowledgeable people — Dr. W. E. Mitchell, Tom Sawyer and Miss M. C. Melburn, including young people who became aware at an early stage of the vital importance of nature for man's survival.

The tours are free. But taking out a membership in the organization would help these people fighting to preserve bits of green belts around the city and Vancouver Island.

Since the association was founded in 1957, it has thwarted more than one politican from selling the trees around the lakes and bits of parkland to promoters.

BATTLE NOT OVER

The battle isn't over. Members are now fighting to stop the development of a large subdivision on the Upper Lake's watershed. It could eventually pollute the lake.

The tours draw attention to many plants which thousands of people are only dimly aware of. The guides also have a wide knowledge of the birds and animals who live in the park.

The walks along the nature trails vary. People have a choice of long or short tours.

But whether they choose the long or short tours, they will all have a better understanding of what parks are for and what they seek to preserve for mankind.

Montreal Tax Worries Councillors

MONTREAL (CP) — Montreal city council approved a $473.5 million budget Wednesday night and one councillor warned the city is headed for financial disaster.

Councillor Paul-Emile Robert said the 1972-73 budget made him "truly disturbed about the financial future of the city."

Two other councillors joined Mr. Robert in criticism of a 6.8-per-cent increase in real estate tax, expected to bring in an additional $7 million annually. They blamed the increase on provincial and federal governments refusing to hand over a greater share of tax revenues to municipalities.

Net income for the opening quarter of this year was $2.44 a share, topping the old any quarter mark of $2.14 set in the second quarter of 1965 and the $1.89 a share earned in the first quarter of 1966, the previous high first quarter.

Guaranty

Guaranty Trust Company of Canada reports first quarter earnings of $1.1 million equivalent to 25.2 cents per share compared with $693,000 or 17.8 cents in the same quarter last year.

The earnings are exclusive of net gains on security transactions. The company's policy is to take net gains or losses on security transactions into earnings only in the second and fourth quarters. The company increased its dividend from 12.5 cents to 14 cents per share per quarter with the April dividend.

Montreal Trust

Montreal Trust Company reports first quarter net income of $1.1 million or 46 cents per share compared with 673,000 or 28 cents in the same quarter last year. A dividend of 20 cents per share was declared payable July 14 to shareholders of record June 30, 1972.

Sherritt

Despite improved nickel sales in the first three months of 1972, lower prices for all forms of nickel resulted in a lower profit in the quarter for Sherritt Gordon Mines Ltd. of Toronto.

The company has reduced finished nickel inventories to about 4.8 million pounds or a three-month supply on hand.

Profit during the first quarter was $2,465,000 or 19 cents a share, down from $2,939,000 or 26 cents a share a year earlier. Sales rose to $22,870,000 from $19,488,000.

Maclean-Hunter

Maclean-Hunter Ltd. reports first-quarter profit of $969,000 of 12.1 cents a share, up from $478,000 or six cents a share a year earlier.

Revenue increased during the three months of 1972 to $17,236,000 from $15,138,000 in 1971.

Fort Garry Trust

Fort Garry Trust Co. reports a net profit of $209,588 for 1971, an increase of 286 per cent over 1970.

Earnings a share for the Winnipeg-based company, taking into account the issuing of 34,500 new shares, rose to $1.20 in 1971 from 36 cents in 1970.

Equatorial Still Suspended

The stock was suspended Tuesday following a drilling dispute with Afton mines. Afton charged that Equatorial was drilling on claims held by Afton.

Collapse Possible—Clyne

VANCOUVER (CP) — The chairman of MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. said Wednesday that an economic collapse affecting all industry is possible "if government and labor continue to act as if corporate coffers constitute a bottomless cornucopia."

The warning was offered to MacMillan Bloedel shareholders by J. V. Clyne in his annual report on last year's economic performance of the company and its subsidiaries.

Mr. Clyne said that although the company's profit in 1971 reached $25.5 million, an increase from $17.' million the year before,and was described as a "bonanza" by labor, it could "in no way be described as satisfactory when it is realized that it represents only a profit of $1.22 for each common share."

Furthermore, he said, the company achieved a return of only 4.1 per cent in 1971 on its capital investment.

STEPPING DOWN today as president of MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. is J. V. Clyne, 70. His retirement was announced following the company's annual meeting Wednesday. Clyne, who has been president since 1958, will continue as board chairman.

Against this performance, the company now is faced with a demand from the International Woodworkers of America for wage increases totaling $3.20 an hour, Mr. Clyne said. That demand, representing a 71-percent increase in IWA benefits and wages, would cost MacMillan $62.3 million annually apart from increases to be paid to other unions under existing contracts, he added.

"Such a demand is, of course, meaningless and fantastic and I wish the public and union members would realize the consequences.

"They do not appear to understand that inflated wage demands and work stoppages and destroying the fabric of a society upon which they themselves depend."

Mr. Clyne, who also serves as chief executive officer, said he cannot believe that British Columbia labor leaders are seeking to damage the economy to the detriment of members of their own unions, nor that they want to aggravate unemployment or cause suffering from lost wages.

"But I can see events developing, which if not interrupted, can cause far-reaching and long-lasting damage to all who live in this province."

RAPS TAX BURDEN

He reiterated earlier statements that private investment, as a cure for the sagging economy and unemployment, could best be aided by reducing "the weight of taxes," particularly on the forest industry.

"For years this company has been paying income and logging taxes at the effective rate of about 15 percentage points in excess of the rate paid by some of our major American competitors."

"If the Canadian government would give Canadian companies the same kind of tax treatment we would need to concern ourselves very much less with American takeover of Canadian industry."

"Money is needed to develop this country and American capital will still be required, but if Canadian companies were given the same opportunity as the Americans to generate capital for re-investment we would see far more Canadian money going into the development of Canadian resources."

Mr. Clyne also criticized the federal government on its unemployment policies and associated efforts to stimulate private investment.

Contract Awaits Study

VANCOUVER (CP) — Lornex Mining Corp. Ltd. has complied with a federal government request to refrain from revising its contract with Japanese copper buyers until after the government completes a study of all such agreements.

Lornex president Robert D. Armstrong told the company's annual meeting Mines Minister Donald MacDonald made the request to all concentrate producers following currency devaluation and economic reverses in Japan.

The Lornex Mines' entire copper concentrate production has been contracted to the Japanese for 12 years.

$91M SPENT ON DAM

OTTAWA (CP) — The South Saskatchewan River Dam project initiated in 1958 by the then prime minister John Diefenbaker has cost taxpayers $91 million in construction costs to date.

The amount was given in a Commons reply to Adrien Lambert (SC—Bellechasse), who also asked whether the Bank of Canada financed the project. He was told it didn't.

COMPARISON

Chart shows the favorable tax position of stocks over bonds or salary income under the revised tax laws this year.

What your $1.00 will be worth after taxes in 1972:

On Income of:	After income tax	Canadian Stocks Dividends	Canadian Stocks Capital gain	Bond interest
$63,000	$ .40	$ .53	$ .70	$ .40
$28,000	.50	.67	.75	.50
$15,000	.60	.80	.80	.60
$10,000	.70	.93	.85	.70
$6,000	.80	1.06	.90	.80

Thus the high-income man would retain only 40 per cent of his salary or bond interest but would keep 53 per cent of dividends and 70 per cent of his capital gain in stocks. The person making $6,000 per year keeps 80 per cent of his income after taxes but keeps 90 per cent of capital gains and more than 100 per cent of money earned in dividends.

The 106 per cent on dividends acts like a negative income tax encouraging those in the lower-income brackets to invest in Canadian stocks. But the tax advantage of stocks is spread through all levels of income.

Inflation Hike 'Inevitable'

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

The federal government's forecast of a free-spending economy this year is good news for business but bad news for savings.

An increase in the rate of inflation is almost inevitable.

The glowing government forecast published Wednesday came as no surprise to investment dealers, according to a Victoria spokesman.

George Evans, Island representative in the Pacific district of the Investment Dealers of Canada, said the recession has passed and the economy is on the way up. The brightening picture is reflected in increased first quarter earnings being reported by most firms this week.

What could investors do to prevent their savings from being gobbled up by inflation?

Over the long term the best hedge against inflation is equity stocks, Evans said.

MOST IN STOCKS

Whether the person had $100 saved up or $100,000, the best program would be to put at least 80 per cent into stocks and perhaps invest the remainder in convertible bonds or savings bonds.

While there is a certain security in bonds, over the long haul they are a loser to inflation and taxes, he said.

He offered these figures.

An investment of $100 in bonds after a year might be worth $106 (based on 6 per cent interest) but the six dollars earned is fully taxable as income. So in fact the person has $104. But he has lost about four per cent to inflation. With luck he still has, in effect, the same $100 he began with after a year of investment.

Major stocks, on the other hand, produce an annual growth rate on average of from 15 to 20 per cent, he said, as the value of companies increases with inflation.

LOWER TAX RATE

So $100 invested in stocks should return on average $115 to $120 plus about two per cent in dividends. The dividends are taxed at a lower rate than interest from bonds.

He said an advantage stocks have over real estate is that while both increase in value over the years, real estate costs money to maintain in terms of taxes while stocks instead of costing produce a fee in the form of dividends.

In his reference to stocks he excludes from consideration the penny mining issues which are ventures into speculation rather than investment.

ANTIQUES

"Bank stocks, publishing companies, Imperial Oil, Woodwards, natural resources, these are the ones that can be counted on to grow over the years. Stocks in stores will increase. They have to, as business increases. Banks, too."

Some investors have looked at jewelry or antiques as hedges against inflation but this was best left to those who knew the fields thoroughly as it required specialized knowledge.

One sound real estate investment would be to purchase an expensive house to live in and hold it for a long term. This was better than buying land or a second house for investment because only one's place of residence is exempt from the capital gains tax.

THE FIRST 27 STOREYS WERE BUILT ABOUT TWO BILLION YEARS AGO.
WE JUST ADDED THE TOP THREE.

There's a spot, not far from the very heart of Victoria, where age-old rockface juts to the height of a twenty-seven storey building. It's a beautiful spot. With an incredible view that stretches out to the sea and beyond. And it is on this spot that we added the 28th, 29th and 30th floors. And we called it Faircliff. Victoria's oldest and newest condominium.

Faircliff is no ordinary place to live. The extra touches tell you that right away. Like the open roof garden for sun worshippers and nature buffs. The large recreation room with a full range of leisure activities. And swirlpool to help you unwind. Private patios. Two acres of natural landscaping. And, of course, the spectacular Faircliff view.

We've created something very different in condominium living at Faircliff. Come and see for yourself.

Stanfield Vows Aid for Middle Class

By RICHARD STARR

WINNIPEG (CP) — Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield began a three-day trip to Western Canada Wednesday by committing his party to policies to help the middle-income earner the old-age pensioner and the businessman.

Mr. Stanfield, addressing more than 1,000 Manitoba Conservatives at a $20-a-plate fund raising dinner, said the Trudeau government which promised the just society in 1968 has created the "aimless society."

The top priority of a government led by him would be restoration of full employment. This can be done by measures "that will encourage Canadian business and industry to expand and by allowing Canadians of all ages to take their proper place in the economcc life of this country.

Businessmen who wish to excel and compete "will be given a chance to do so."

Mr. Stanfield leaves here today on a flight to Vancouver where he is to meet Indian, German and Chinese community leaders. He is to visit Prince George, Friday.

"No old-age pensioner in this country will be left to fall behind and denied simple justice by government," Mr. Stanfield told an overflow crowd in a suburban hotel.

"We shall adjust pensions to compensate for real rises in the cost of living. That is a commitment."

From "so-called tax reform" to the new family-allowances legislation "middle-income earners in Canada have been taking it in the neck from the Trudeau government. . . ."

"The middle-income earner deserves justice too. We shall see that he gets it. That is a commitment."

Mr. Stanfield also promised that a Conservative government would keep the people informed of its policies. "We shall not hide behind veils of bureaucratic secrecy. We shall tell the people the truth."

Earlier at a news conference, Mr. Stanfield repeated his call for a June federal election saying it is needed to end "the sea of confusion" that the Trudeau government has created.

NO ENCORES were requested when Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield took a few moments from his itinerary Wednesday to show a fund-raising dinner in Winnipeg that Anne Murray is not the only Maritimer who can sing. Stanfield, after a little urging, joined singer Sandra Sidwell in a few chords.

It's Off to Ipswich For Twamley—Again!

A couple of years ago, there was a note here that a young Victorian had heeded the call of professional soccer. Bruce Twamley, all of 16 years, was on his way to Ipswich, and would seek fame and glory under the guiding genius of coach Bobby Robson.

A great opportunity? It certainly was.

Ipswich was a first-division side, Robson had been a Fulham stalwart, also coach of the Vancouver club in the ill-fated North American professional league, and Twamley was the rising star of the Gorge soccer program. He was considered very good.

Time came, Twamley went, and in two years, he had moved up the ladder to where he was splitting his time between the reserves and the first team. That's like being a first-string spare for the big team. He was on the verge of making it just as big as he had hoped for.

Then, he got fed up, homesick, wanted to finish school, and most of all, express his nationalism. He wanted a chance to play for Canada in the World Cup elimination matches with United States and Mexico.

So he packed up and came home.

But he was still tied to Ipswich, and no, there would be no permission granted to play amateur or professional soccer for anybody.

"I just couldn't quit," he said. "They had me."

He's Got No Fight With the Coach

So last year he sat out a season, coached the University of Victoria seconds "we won the league title" and now remorsefully, he says: "I'm going back to Ipswich."

He has to if he wants that chance to play for Canada. "Robson had given me permission," he said, "but I still have to go back."

If he is slightly bitter, the rancor is not aimed directly at the coach. "Robson has been very good to me; we get along very, very well. He's got a job to do, and is doing it."

Besides, Twamley will get a new contract when he returns. That's part of the deal. "There are set bonuses," he admitted, "but few players ever tell what they make. But if you are good, so are the rewards."

Sure, the system is wrong, but now that Bruce has made his decision he's going to give it his best shot.

"There wouldn't be any use going back, if I didn't. Sure, it will be tough starting over again," he went on. "I haven't played in a year, and feel that even if I do play in Canada, I will still need six to eight weeks of hard training in England to be in my best condition."

At present a student at Camosun College, Twamley said "schooling is a bit of a problem over there. We really don't have that much time. Football is so demanding. We train from 10-12 each day, and then usually go back in the afternoon for more."

But he will attend college in Ipswich when he returns. A university course may eventually follow.

They Are Keeping a Place Open

There had been a suggestion that he might play in Toronto this year. He didn't deny it, but he didn't say that he was going there either. The merest hint was "I might."

He knows John Pickburn of the Vancouver Spartans too. "He's a great guy," was his only comment. Fair enough, because it was John who wanted Bruce badly for his team a year ago, and would probably welcome him again.

If there was another invitation from John, he wasn't saying. But he had been asked previously to play on the mainland by more than one team."

Would he play in Victoria? "I have never been approached," was the surprising reply.

But then, he can only play here until July, and hopefully during that time he can qualify for the national team.

Then terms dictate that he return to Ipswich, currently tied for 12th place in the English League first division. He's tied to that team until they untie the knot.

And is there a place for him, after a year on the shelf?

"Oh, yes," said Twamley, "Robson has said I will start with the second team. He has left a place open for me at full-back.

"He's been more than fair; and I plan to make the best of it."

And why not? If Bruce was highly rated three years ago, he still appears to have time on his side, even today.

Defending Champ Leading by Four

Defending champion Willard Soames of Seattle recovered strongly Wednesday to spring into the lead of the 42nd annual Empress tournament at Victoria Golf Club.

Soames fired a sparkling net 63 for a two-day total of 131 going into today's final round. Playing with a 24 handicap, he shot a 92 in the opening round Tuesday, then rebounded with a gross 87 Wednesday.

Shirley Laws of Seattle took a two-stroke lead in the women's division over Kathy King of Burlington, Wash., with a net 164. Mrs. King was the first-day leader.

Health of 'The Chief' Boston's Big Concern

Times News Service

About the only thing hockey fans in Boston are sure of is that their beloved Bruins begin the quest of their second Stanley Cup in three years Sunday afternoon at Boston Garden against New York Rangers.

One of the reasons for concern is the condition of John Bucyk, a two-goal scorer in Tuesday's 5-3 victory over St. Louis Blues that gave the Bruins a sweep of their best-of-seven National Hockey League playoff round.

The Chief suffered a charley horse in his right leg when he was flipped by Blues' Phil Roberto. Bucyk and his linemates, Fred Stanfield and John McKenzie, have scored 45 points in Boston's nine post-season games.

The same trio set the playoff standard for a line, 52, two years ago in 14 games.

"He'll be all right Sunday," Boston trainer Dan Canney said Wednesday. "Just a little rest, a little treatment and the Chief will be back out there."

HAD EASY SERIES

Both the Bruins and Rangers, who open their final round at 2 p.m. EST Sunday and will be seen nationally in Canada on the CTV network, swept their semi-final playoff rounds in the minimum number of games.

The New Yorkers had a surprisingly easy six-game series with Montreal Canadiens in the opening playoff round and followed it up with an even more surprising sweep of Chicago Black Hawks.

There was still no word from the Boston camp on the status of centre Derek Sanderson who missed the entire St. Louis series with a virus.

Sanderson resumed skating late Tuesday in Boston, but his weakened condition makes him a questionable starter for Sunday's games.

In New York, coach Emile Francis said: "We'll be deep at centre with Jean Ratelle back."

The New York Ranger general manager-coach was in a relaxed mood as he discussed his preparations for the final.

But he was wary, too, about tipping his hand too soon.

"We'll use 12 forwards and five defencemen for certain in the first game," he said. That means he will hold out two defencemen and one forward.

Giacomin was in goal for all six games as the Rangers eliminated Montreal 4-2 in the first playoff round. But late in the first game against Chicago he suffered a twisted knee. Villemure was in goal for the next three games, all won by the Rangers in a 4-0 sweep of the Black Hawks.

Oriole Manager Asks Umps to Peek

By The Associated Press

Manager Earl Weaver of Baltimore Orioles, never bashful with umpires, let them know what was on his mind Wednesday night after they called a game because of rain with Kansas City Royals leading 5-3 in the sixth inning.

"That wasn't a definite effort on the umpires' part," Weaver said after Baltimore's fourth straight loss. "They didn't even take the tarpaulin off the field to see if the ground was wet. How can you say the field's unplayable if you don't even look?"

The Orioles had scored three runs in the top of the inning and had a man on second base with two out and pinch-hitter Bobby Grich coming to bat when it began to pour.

The hot Chicago White Sox won their seventh straight game with a 7-5 triumph over Cleveland Indians in 10 innings; Detroit Tigers hammered Texas Rangers 8-1; New York Yankees tripped Oakland Athletics 4-2; California Angels turned back Milwaukee Brewers 3-1 and Minnesota Twins stopped Boston Red Sox 3-1 in the other American League games.

Before the Orioles came up with their rain-shortened rally in the sixth, the Royals had put the game away with a five-run fifth, highlighted by John Mayberry's two-run single. The runs broke Dave McNally's string of 22 and 1-3 scoreless innings.

CUBS FALL

In the National League, Chicago Cubs, reeling under a seven-game losing streak, employed a bit of strategy in Houston as they tried to overhaul the streaking Astros but the strategy backfired.

Deadlocked 4-4 in the bottom of the 10th inning, reliever Dan McGinn got the first two Astros, including Jim Wynn. It was Wynn's home run in the eighth inning that tied the contest. Up to the plate strode Lee May, who had already crashed four homers in the young season. May had already doubled home a run. So the Cubs decided to bypass the slugging first baseman, giving him an intentional walk to get to Bob Watson, hitless in four previous at-bats.

But Watson hit a line-drive double to right centre field that sent May scurrying around the bases. And when Chicago centre fielder Rick Monday slipped trying to chase down the hit, May was home free, the Astros had a 5-4 victory, their ninth straight, and the Cubs had successive loss No. 8.

In other National League action, Cincinnati Reds held off Pittsburgh Pirates 7-6, St. Louis Cardinals beat Atlanta Braves 9-4, San Francisco Giants overtook Philadelphia Phillies 8-6 in 10 innings, Los Angeles Dodgers blanked Montreal Expos 2-0 and New York Mets defeated San Diego Padres 5-1.

West-United Set For First Step

Victoria West-United takes the first step toward the Pacific Coast Soccer League crown Saturday at 2 p.m. by meeting New Westminster Blues at Royal Athletic Park.

Phase one is disposing of the Blues in their sudden-death semi-final. That would earn United a berth in the final against Paul's Canadians for the Top Star Trophy and $375 in prize money.

Paul's, who finished second, defeated third-place North Shore 4-2 last weekend in the other semi-final.

United, which finished first, should be favored against the Blues, who qualified for post-season play by beating Victoria Gorge in a special playoff. But Victoria coach Frank Grealy is playing down the favorite's role.

"Definitely not," snapped Grealy when it was suggested that his club may be over-confident. "The Blues have improved since we played them last and they looked very good and were much different against Gorge than when we played them last."

"We don't expect an easy game by any means," he said. United downed the Blues 3-1 and 5-2 in regular league meetings.

Vic West Advances To Semis

Doug Hill scored a pair of goals and Butch Foster added another as Victoria West defeated Prospect Lake 3-1 Wednesday in a second-round game in the Victoria and District Soccer League's Jackson Cup competition.

Ron McDonald scored on a penalty goal for Prospect Lake.

Cedeno Suspended

HOUSTON (AP) — Outfielder Cesar Cedeno of Houston Astros was suspended for three games and fined $250 by National League president Charles Feeney after being ejected from the Astros-Chicago Cubs game in the ninth inning Monday night.

Forbidden Offers Gift

Forbidden Plateau, which will cease skiing operations for the season this weekend, is offering a "goodbye" gift to the public.

All tows will be operating free on Sunday, the last day of operation.

The area reported a temperature of 38 degrees this morning under sunny skies. The base is 37 inches.

Roy Campanella Out of Hospital

VALHALLA, N.Y. (AP) — Roy Campanella, the baseball great, was discharged from hospital Wednesday. He has been treated for a pulmonary embolism since March 30.

Campanella, the Brooklyn Dodger catcher elected to baseball's Hall of Fame, will continue outpatient treatment while living at his home in nearby Greenburgh.

Voyageurs Gain Berth in Final

HALIFAX (CP) — Nova Scotia Voyageurs whipped Boston Braves, 5-2, Wednesday night to advance to the American Hockey League finals.

The Voyageurs won the right to face either Cincinnati Swords or Baltimore Clippers for the Calder Cup after they upset the Braves in four straight games in a best-of-seven league semi-final.

Seals Fire Vic Stasiuk

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Vic Stasiuk has been fired as coach of California Golden Seals, Garry Young, general manager of the National Hockey League team, announced Wednesday.

The terse, one-sentence announcement gave no reason why Stasiuk would not be retained for a second year. Stasiuk took over the job last October after he had been fired as coach of Philadelphia Flyers. He had a one-year contract.

The Seals had a 21-39-18 record last season, considerably better than in 1970-71 when they chalked up the league's worst record.

The club had no immediate word on when a new coach would be named.

The Seals, even with a losing record, stood a chance of making the Stanley Cup playoffs. However, an end-of-season slump knocked them out of the running.

Stasiuk played 13 seasons in the NHL with Detroit, Chicago and Boston.

Pats Sideline Wheat Kings

WINNIPEG (CP) — Regina Pats advanced to the final of the Western Canada Hockey League playoffs Wednesday by blanking Brandon Wheat Kings, 6-0, to take their best-of-seven semi-finals, 4-2.

Pats, who meet Edmonton Oil Kings for the playoff title, received sparkling netminding from Bernie Germaine, who blocked 38 shots in recording his second shutout of the series.

Pats held period leads of 1-0 and 2-0 before slapping four goals past Dave McLelland in the first eight minutes of the third period.

Clark Gillies, with two goals, Dennis Sobchuk, Rick Uhrich, Brad Anderson and Al Barrett were the Regina marksmen.

The opening game in the best-of-seven finals will be played in Regina Saturday night.

Knicks' Accuracy Trips Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES (AP) — New York Knicks, with Bill Bradley and Jerry Lucas leading a blistering shooting assault by hitting 24 of 32 shots, shattered the Los Angeles Lakers, 114-92, Wednesday night in the first game of their best-of-seven series for the National Basketball Association crown.

Bradley hit 11 of 12 shots, including his first eight, and Lucas fired in a series of long-range jumpers as the Knicks built a big lead in the second quarter and were never challenged. Bradley wound up with 29 points and Lucas with 26. Gail Goodrich led the Lakers with 20.

The game was decided in the first half, when the Knicks hit 72 per cent of their shots and took a 67-49 lead.

A national television audience and a sellout crowd of 17,505 watched as the Lakers were routed for the second consecutive playoff series opener. Los Angeles, blitzed by Milwaukee, 93-72, in the first game of their Western Conference championship series, came back to defeat the defending champion Bucks in six games.

The Knicks, who beat the Lakers for the NBA championship two years ago in a seven-game series, and Los Angeles play here Sunday in game No. 2.

In the American Basketball Association, New York Mets defeated Virginia Squires 118-107 to even their best-of-seven semi-final 2-2, while Indiana Pacers topped Utah Stars 105-99 to level their best-of-seven semi-final series 3-3.

Bert Sinks Ace At Colwood

Bert Simmonds sank his first hole-in-one in 12 years of playing golf Wednesday at Royal Colwood.

Simmonds, playing in a foursome with wife Rena and Bob and Alice Gray, used a four iron to count his ace on the 154-yard, par-three fourth hole.

What Quarterbacks Have Gone Where

(Times News Services)

This seems to be the year of the quarterback shuffle in the National Football League.

Minnesota Vikings traded veteran Gary Cuozzo to St. Louis Cardinals Wednesday for wide receiver John Gilliam and two draft choices.

Tuesday, Earl Morrall, who guided Baltimore Colts to the NFL championship in 1968, was claimed on waivers by Miami Dolphins.

Cuozzo, who shared the quarterbacking duties a year ago but played out the season without a contract to become a free agent, had asked the Vikings to play him or trade him. He would have become a free agent May 1.

In addition to Gilliam, the Vikings get the Cardinals' No. 2 draft choice and the No. 4 draft choice they gave to St. Louis last year when Dale Hackbart went to the Cardinals for Bob Brown and Nate Wright.

★ ★ ★

ALSO IN FOOTBALL, New England Patriots traded defensive end Fred Dryer to Los Angeles in exchange for the Rams' No. 1 choice in the 1973 draft and veteran tackle Rick Cash . . . Dryer was acquired from New York Giants but had refused to sign with the Patriots . . . Meanwhile, Canadian League teams continued their steady parade of player signings . . . Hamilton Tiger-Cats landed holdovers Garney Henley and John Williams, and newcomer Al Brenner, an offensive end . . . Saskatchewan Roughriders signed tackle Ken Krahn, a graduate of Idaho State, while Montreal Alouettes got a contract from Steve Livas, a 21-year-old quarterback from the University of Illinois.

SPORTS SHORTS

IN TENNIS, Pat Bostrom, 21, lost her opening bid to land a place on the men's varsity team at the University of Washington in Seattle . . . Pat, who is considered an outstanding player, challenged Bill Carolyn, No. 9 man on the Husky team, and lost 6-4, 6-2 . . . However, she retained the right to challenge other members of the team . . . University officials ruled earlier that Pat, who has been trying to upgrade women's sports at the university, should get a chance to try for the men's squad.

★ ★ ★

IN HOCKEY, Francis (King) Clancy, who never won a scrap as a belligerent but lightweight National League defenceman, now has captured an award that usually goes to Toronto Maple Leafs' best player . . . Vice-president of Leafs and 69 years old, Clancy pulled the Toronto club out of a mid-season lethargy after coach Johnny McLellan became ill . . . He was named winner of the J. P. Bickell Memorial Cup . . . Minnesota Fighting Saints of the fledgling World Association have signed former Pittsburgh Penguin defenceman George Konik to a two-year contract . . . Defencemen Ron Harris and Arnie Brown of the Detroit Red Wings are expected to be released from hospital in about a week after having undergone "successful" knee operations . . . And contracts for general manager Dave Creighton and coach Larry Wilson of American League's Rhode Island Reds will "not be renewed."

Endangered Species High On Convention Priorities

Stress will be placed on protection of endangered species during the 16th annual B.C. Wildlife Federation convention which will be held in Richmond, May 3 to 6.

The federation is the parent body of all fish and wildlife clubs throughout the province, and the convention will see delegates voting on numerous resolutions presented by clubs for provincial adoption.

The theme, "hunters and fishermen — endangered species?" is very apt for this annual sportsmen's get-together, as delegates will be presented with reports which call for "wild river" legislation and a constitutional change which will see the organization of a more effective federation.

It is in the resolutions presented by the clubs, however, that the theme is magnified. These resolutions show how serious the status of specific wildlife populations have become and how unilateral exploitation by industry has limited and continues to further limit fish and wildlife habitat.

★ ★ ★

Restrictions for specific wildlife populations are very evident in the following resolutions:

—That aliens not residing in Canada be prohibited from hunting such endangered species as grizzly bear, sheep, caribou and mountain goat.

—That all hunting of all game animals by aliens not residing in Canada be gradually phased out over the next five years.

—That there be a 12-inch mimimum size limit on all streams with anadromous fish.

—That there be a one-fish-per-day limit on steelhead from June 1st to August 31st throughout the province.

—That the non-resident steelhead licence be $100 per season.

—That there be a prvincial access study with a view to regulating public use of remote access roads.

—That the BCWF endorse the Kechika National Park the purpose to set aside an area containing a large variety of wildlife and natural values north of the 54th parallel.

—That there be a once in five year permit for mountain sheep for resident hunters.

Deep concern for the damage caused by industry has resulted in resolutions calling for:

—The establishment of greenstrip and leavestrip legislation to protect fish and wildlife habitat.

—To cancel coal licences in the lower Fording River (Kootenays) watershed in favor of wildlife management.

—That no further hydro electric development take place on any stream which supports populations of anadromous fish.

—That the fish and wildlife branch inaugurate an extensive program of habitat aquisition.

Concern for the education and public image of the hunter and angler, and for the "fair chase" concept of sportsmen has resulted in many resolutions.

—That a course of instruction be made available by the department of education covering the basic principles of ecology, wildlife managment, identification, firearms and boating safety, first aid and survival.

—That hunters be compelled to make every effort to remove meat of the deer family from the field.

—That the hunting of game and carrying of firearms be banned from snowmboiles, all-terrain vehicles and motor bikes.

—That the total monetary value of prizes in any freshwater fishing contest be limited to $25.

—That it be unlawful to keep game fish other than when hooked in the mouth.

—That the minister of environment cause to be applied regulations that would require licences for saltwater sports fishermen.

—That regulations be set against shooting on or near garbage dumps.

It is, however, the resolutions calling for an awareness by the members of the legislative assembly of the inadquate budget allotted to the fish and wildlife branch for management that the convention is centered.

A great number of clubs sent in resolutions asking for increased monies for fish and wildlife management. This year's budget however, still falls short of even the direct revenue (licences, tags, etc.) received.

Steps that must be taken to improve the status of our fish and wildlife resources will be aired in full at the convention. However, it is certain that unless there is a marked improvement not only will hunters and anglers be endangered species, but the availability of these natural resources to all citizens will also be in peril.

Tennis Dispute Settled

NAMED WINNER for second time of Hal Laycoe Cup as Western Hockey League's outstanding defenceman is Sandy Hucul (above), of Phoenix Roadrunners. Hucul also won award in 1968.

LONDON (AP) — The world's top tennis stars are returning to Forest Hill—possibly this year—and to Wimbledon in 1973.

And the contract pros—Rod Laver, Arthur Ashe and the rest —will be able to play in the Davis Cup again, provided the Davis Cup nations agree to admit them.

Tennis officials, after nine months of quarrelling over money, announced Wednesday a new formula for open tennis in which all players will be free to compete anywhere.

Lamar Hunt, Texan boss of the World Championship Tennis professional group, told a news conference he will soon have no players under contract and will offer no guarantees.

Instead he will spend four months each year staging tournaments with prize money totalling $1.25 million. For these events he will pay sanction fees to the International Lawn Tennis Federation, the world ruling body with which he has been at loggerheads since last summer.

The ILTF will promote tournaments for the other eight months of the year.

Allan Heyman, president of the ILTF, said he envisaged between $3 million and $4 million in prizes every year.

The ILTF must still formally ratify the agreement at its annual meeting in Helsinki in July.

Concerning the Davis Cup, Heyman said it was unfortunate that the tournament is run independently of the ILTF.

"It will be up to the Davis Cup nations to decide whether WCT stars can play," Heyman added.

Six Former Winners Seek 'Rolloff' Seconds

There could be six contestants shooting for "seconds" Sunday at Mayfair Lanes as tenpinners bid for cash and trophies in the ninth annual Times Bowler-of-the-Year rolloffs.

Three former champions—Bob Willis, Rod Caddell and Henry Loo—are listed among the male qualifiers, who earned their rolloff berths by winning weekly awards during the 26-week, 1971-72 Times Bowler of the Week contest.

Barb Berthiaume, last year's rolloff queen; Lorna Pollock and Muriel Dodsworth are the three past winners among the 26 ladies who earned places in the women's tenpin rolloff.

Bottled Dollars Found in Garbage

Paul Dickinson, 22, and Clarence Robinson, 19, turned the money over to police. They said they found the sealed jars in the mechanism of the truck's tailgate. Police have been unable to trace the owner of the money.

CALGARY — An unwanted alligator suddenly became popular. The young reptile, between three and four feet long, has been claimed by Wally Ursalek of Edmonton and will join his travelling carnival called Wally Amusements.

Ingrid Graham of Calgary, who said earlier this week she didn't like the alligator and wanted to get rid of it, received at least 80 telephone calls from people offering to take the beast off her hands. The alligator, named Spot, was purchased in Vancouver by Mrs. Graham's 15-year-old son Ronald and two other boys.

LONDON — The member of Parliament who this week set a world non-stop walking record finished last in a race in the House of Commons.

Dick Crawshaw, 54, was so slow walking through the Commons Wednesday night he missed casting his vote in an important debate. "I was a bit concerned in case anyone trod on my poor, aching feet," explained the Labor MP ho last Monday became the first man to walk more than 250 miles non-stop.

SYDNEY, Australia — After 14 daughters, Mrs. Ron Jessop finally gave birth to a son this month.

"No more now — that's the last," said the 42-year-old woman. Eight of her daughters are living, and she has one grandchild. Mrs. Jessop said she married at 13 and had her first child at 14.

OTTAWA — RCMP Commissioner W. L. Higgitt has agreed to remain on the job for an additional year after his normal September, 1972, retirement date, it was announced Wednesday night by Solicitor-General Jean-Pierre Goyer.

Commissioner Higgitt, although only 54, normally would have retired in September after 35 years with the RCMP.

BRUSSELS — Belgian banker Frank Van Roosbroeck, a virtual prisoner in China since 1950, will be released this week, the foreign ministry announced today.

A ministry spokesman said Van Roosbroeck, who was manager of the Shanghai office of the Banque Belge pour l'Etranger, was prevented from leaving China when his Shanghai assignment was over because in 1949 the bank had transferred $10 million of funds to the United States when the Communists came to power. Chinese authorities demanded the return of the funds, but these were blocked by the U.S. government.

ALGIERS — A Canadian computer engineer, Robert Noel, was arrested as he was leaving Algeria 12 days ago at the end of his two-year contract, Canadian embassy sources here said today.

The government newspaper El Moudjahis said Noel, 31, from Normandin, Que., was detained at the airport when police found he was carrying confidental documents belonging to Sonatrach, the state-run oil and natural gas concern. Inquiries showed that he had taped conficential scientific programs, the newspaper said.

GLASGOW, Scotland — An American woman has claimed the $2.6 million reward offered by a scotch whisky manufacturer for the capture of the Loch Ness monster.

"I have been living with the monster for the past 20 years," wrote the unnamed woman from Jackson, Miss.

LONDON—Trans-Pacific rowers John Fairfax and Sylvia Cook flew back to Britain from Australia Wednesday to a family welcome. Miss Cook's mother hugged her daughter tightly and said: "Welcome back, darling. Well done."

Neither Fairfax, 33, nor Miss Cook, 32, would talk about their 8,000-mile rowboat voyage from San Francisco to Hayman's Island off Australia's Queensland coast. "We are both under contract to tell our stories and cannot say anything at the moment," Fairfax said.

Family Allowance Bill's NDP Critics Ignore Poor, Pamper Rich—Munro

OTTAWA (CP) — Exasperated by extended Commons debate on his bill to transform the family allowance system, Welfare Minister John Munro fore into New Democratic Party MPs Wednesday for opposing it.

He told the Commons the NDP appears to have made a cynical decision to appeal for votes among the top 25 per cent of income earners, abandoning its commitment to the poor in the process.

He also said that the way to fight poverty effectively in Canada without driving people to welfare is to combine a selective family allowances plan with increased minimum wages.

The bill would throw out the current baby bonus plan, which makes payments to all families with children, and replace it with a scheme that would give more money to fewer people— primarily those families with annual incomes below $7,000.

NDP members with some Social Credit and Conservative support have been rising one by one to denounce the bill, mainly on the argument that it would categorize and stigmatize lower-income Canadians by giving them benefits those with higher incomes wouldn't receive.

Debate on second reading—preliminary to sending bills to committee for detailed scrutiny —has dragged on for eight days and still doesn't appear to be near an end.

MAKES CONCESSION

Mr. Munro made one concession to the Conservatives Wednesday.

Gordon Fairweather (PC—Fundy Royal) asked whether he would make alterations to a clause that now would limit benefits to children in foster homes and institutions to half the regular rate.

The minister said the reasoning behind the clause was that the federal government already pays half the costs for institutionalizing or keeping children in foster homes.

But he said he was perfectly willing "to look at this again in committee to see if some better formula cannot be worked out."

The NDP proposal to make family allowance benefits universal would cost at least $700 million, he said, which couldn't be recovered in taxes even if every benefit paid to families earning $10,000 or more a year was taxed back at 100 per cent.

The New Democrats, who originally said they would approve the bill at second reading, had "decided cynically that perhaps it could appeal to the middle-income voter and obtain some political gain at the expense of the poor of Canada."

They had belittled themselves and the principles for which they stood in an attempt to turn middle-income earners, many of whom will lose all claim to family allowances, against the poor.

SOME SUPPORT PLAN

But while some middle-income earners rather resented losing the allowances, said Mr. Munro, many had told him that they were prepared to take the loss to assist people in poorer circumstances.

Mr. Munro said that "once we bring in legislation of this kind we can realistically raise our minimum wage levels and perhaps make a joint, effective attack on poverty."

There were few incentives now for people with children to work for minimum wages, he said, because going on welfare at least meant the size of the family would be taken into account.

The federal minimum wage is $1.75 an hour and no province has a rate any higher.

But if family allowance benefits were increased for the poor and the minimum wages were raised as well, there would be incentives to work.

People who had to be on welfare would not suffer from the new benefit scheme, he said, although provinces could conceivably cut welfare payments by the amount of the increase in family allowances.

"I would think that any province which would adopt such a policy of avarice, such a harsh policy in terms of low-income groups, would be repudiated by provincial electors."

Universal family allowance now provides monthly payments of $6 for each child under 10, $8 for those between 10 and 15, and $10 for youths between 16 and 18 who are in school.

WILL DOUBLE BENEFITS

Mr. Munro said it would approximately double benefits for most of the 1,249,000 families in lower-income brackets who would receive maximum benefits, and over-all about 75 per cent of families would not lose out under the new plan.

Stanley Knowles, NDP House Leader, returned to the fray by saying that allowance recipients would wear "the badge of poverty"— they would have to "parade, declare and assert their poverty."

In the 1930s elderly people had been ashamed to apply for pensions because there was a means test. When it had been removed a whole new way of life had been opened to them.

The NDP, said Mr. Knowles, wanted even larger payments for poor people, but couldn't accept the strings the government had attached, which amounted to a means test.

FISHING BAN 'BOON'

TORONTO (CP) The federal government's ban on commercial fishing for Atlantic salmon in New Brunswick is a godsend for the fishermen, Environment Minister Jack Davis said Wednesday.

Mr. Davis said reduced catches have been whittling away their livelihood and they will be better off under the government's compensation plan. The compensation budget exceeds the $3 million annual income from fishing, he said.

Asked if it was fair to continue sport fishing for salmon, Mr. Davis said anglers take only three per cent of the salmon caught and that this is not a significant factor in the current reduction of the fish population.

Mr. Davis said loud objections from fishermen would disappear when they learn the details of the compensation plan.

New WCB Accident Prevention Regulations Effective May 1

Accident Prevention Regulations Handbook available to British Columbia workers.

This is an era of rapid change in industry. New technology introduces new machinery and new methods, and with them, new hazards.

The Workmen's Compensation Board is constantly reviewing the accident prevention regulations to make sure they are up-to-date.

A joint WCB-labour-management committee has completed another review which was followed by public hearings. The result is the publishing of this 298 page handbook containing revised and new accident prevention regulations. These regulations apply more realistically to present day work practices and will be of great benefit in hazard control.

The new handbook of regulations has been mailed to all employers. Copies of the handbook are available to workmen without charge from your local WCB office, your employer, or by sending in the coupon below.

I encourage workers in British Columbia to obtain a copy of these regulations by contacting us or your employer."

Quotations of Chairman Pierre Compiled

OTTAWA (CP) — Selected sayings of Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau have been compiled by a high official in his office and put into a book.

Called Conversation with Canadians and published by the University of Toronto Press, the volume is being sent to book stores now for official publication May 6.

It is edited by Ivan Head, one of Mr. Trudeau's special assistants, and contains excerpts from speeches, interviews and question-and-answer sessions between February, 1968—five months before Mr. Trudeau became prime minister—and February, 1972.

In his foreword, Mr. Head says that the prime minister has an attractiveness that "stems from his freshness of outlook, his audacity, his intellectual honesty. . . ."

Mr. Trudeau's speeches, he says, have been described as "so beautifully worded that they almost sound like poetry."

Mr. Head since September, 1970, has been the chief draftsman on a team of assistants who help compile prime ministerial speeches.

The book costs $8.50 in hardcover and $1.95 in paperback.

On Parliament Hill—where just about anything the government does these days is being taken as an election hint—the publication of the book is regarded by some as a sign that the date can't be far off.

The argument goes that Mr. Head would have waited longer to produce the book—so as to produce a more completed summary of the prime minister's thoughts—if an election was scheduled for next fall or the spring of 1973.

Hillary Marshall, sales manager for the publisher, has declined to say how many copies will make up the first printing.

Asked whether there are expectations of a best-seller, Mr. Marshall said: "I think we'll sell a few of them all right but in our view it's a good book in its own right."

The foreword says that Mr. Trudeau is as quoted—"and as cruelly misquoted" as any public figure in recent Canadian history.

One example, says Mr. Head, is the use of the quote "Why should I sell your wheat?" attributed to Mr. Trudeau after farmers had thrown grain at him in Winnipeg in December, 1968.

The actual quote as set out in the book: "Well, why should I sell the Canadian farmers' wheat?"

The passage goes on to show that while the prime minister went on to say that wheat "is first and foremost the farmer's problem," he also said that there are various ways the government could help the farmer and that it had done so.

Quotes presented range from Mr. Trudeau's speech made when unveiling a monument to Louis Riel in Regina in October, 1968 when he said the lesson of Riel was that "it is all too easy, should disturbances erupt, to crush them in the name of law and order" to full texts of his nationally televised speeches following the proclamation of the War Measures Act in October, 1970, during the Quebec crisis.

BUREACRATS MUSHROOM

OTTAWA (CP) — The number of federal government employees increased by more than 10 per cent between September, 1970, and September, 1971, Statistics Canada reported Wednesday.

There were 261,685 public servants in September last year compared with 237,157 the year before. Their pay for the month totalled $154.8 million, compared with $133.4 million in September, 1970, an average paycheque of $592 for September, 1972.

That works out to an increase of more than 15 per cent.

Costly Food 'Not Farmers' Fault'

HESPELER, Ont. (CP) — When people blame farmers for the apparently high cost of food they are "barking up the wrong tree," Gordon Hill, president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, said Wednesday.

Only seven per cent of the money the consumer spends in the grocery store goes back to the producer as a return for his investment, labor and management, said Mr. Hill.

"In other words, if chickens are selling two for $1, then the farmer gets seven cents in net income."

Mr. Hill, 45, of Varna, Ont., told about 300 farmers at the annual meeting of the Ontario Broiler Chicken Producers Marketing Board that some people believe farmers are wealthy "just because they have expensive equipment and can pay their bills."

He said food is cheaper today than it has ever been.

"In 1949 it took 20 hours in wages to buy food for a family of four," he said. "In 1959 it took 14 hours to buy the same food for the same family. In 1969 it took 11 hours.

"The cost of buying food was almost cut in half in 20 years. The conclusion is that food is cheaper now than it has been in 20 years. You can buy more food for week's wages than ever before. Income and wages have gone up but food costs have not kept pace."

Travel Curb On Penniless Youth Urged

PENTICTON (CP) — City council here wants a curb on the number of penniless young travelling across Canada.

The city plans to send letters to communities across the country suggesting that they ask the federal government to discourage travel by young persons without money.

Project Delay

VANCOUVER (CP) — Gordon Southam, president of the G. F. Strong Rehabilitation Centre, said that work stoppages in British Columbia may delay completion of a Vancouver treatment centre for handicapped persons. Southam told the rehabilitation centre's annual meeting that the $6 million building was expected to be ready by next April.

Captain Charged

VANCOUVER (CP) — V. Matikka, captain of the Finnish freighter Wirta, is to appear in court next Wednesday on a charge of allowing a dangerous substance to be unloaded without National Harbors Board authorization. The charge was laid after a longshoreman became ill from the effects of hydrogen-cyanide gas escaping from drums of sodium cyanide being unloaded from the Wirta.

Death Unnatural

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — A coroner's jury Wednesday ruled that the death of a blind man who fell into an excavation was unnatural and accidental.

It also urged that street excavations be covered, fenced off, or shielded with backfill.

James McGuire, 49, fell into a 10-foot deep excavation in Burnaby April 10. He was stunned by a blow on the head and drowned in several inches of water.

The construction company foreman told the jury he thought safety warning barriers around the excavation had been shifted by vandals.

By AB KENT
Times Staff

A powerhouse of new help has been authorized for Saanich police department at the nominal cost of $2,700.

Later this year, following departmental estimates approval by municipal council, the police force will be using television, by means of a video tape recording system as a training aid, a tool to wield in crime investigation or to help with law enforcement.

Chief Bob Peterson said the department sees "a multi-use role" for the equipment which elsewhere has been applied to a variety of uses from photo-taping impaired drivers to recording education material for school patrols.

Peterson said video-taping impaired driving subjects is done in the U.S. and there could be a similar use here in the future.

Saanich will be the first municipal force on Vancouver Island to obtain video equipment, although RCMP have four such devices in use throughout their B.C. division and Vancouver city police have it.

Each kit consists of a lightweight portable camera, recording equipment, monitor set, power pack and 12 reels of reusable magnetic tape, each capable of recording for 30 minutes.

The RCMP's training staff has found video recording an aid to self-teaching, for example in family crisis prevention training. Candidates get a better appreciation of the proper techniques by watching themselves handle a set-up situation via instant replay.

For about two years the RCMP have used video directly in police work, for presenting in evidence the layout and conditions at the scene of a sudden death for a coroner's inquest and similar situations.

But the force has yet to try to have the method accepted by a magistrate's court.

In surveillance, building security, monitoring jail cells, crowd control and possibly for collecting evidence remotely — an area open to some interpretation by the courts — the video recording system has potential for police.

"It is an accepted tool in industry and police have to accept it the same way. It is a timesaving tool," a police spokesman said.

Video "has been the topic of cheaper substitute for conventional movie film, can be used any number of times without impairing quality and eventually may be erased to be used for a new purpose. Unlike photographic film, vidoe tape can be played back on the spot.

Vidoe "has been the topic of discussion by most police departments in British Columbia, and I would hazard a guess by all departments across Canada, because of the changes in society and criticisms being made," Peterson said.

Frampton Saw It Coming

Victoria Ald. Percy Frampton said today an attempt to unseat him as acting mayor, slated for today's council meeting, was motivated by Mayor Peter Pollen's concern that "I don't follow along on his path."

Although he had been expecting some such move, Frampton said he was annoyed at the manner in which it had been handled without his being consulted.

The matter was to come before council today in the form of a motion on Pollen's recommendation that four aldermen — Clyde Savage, Tom Christie, Harold Olafson and Ove Witt — should serve as acting mayor for two months each.

If successful, the move would end Frampton's "permanent" role as acting mayor after only four months.

The policy was established by Pollen when he started his term in January. Previously, aldermen held the position on a rotating basis.

Pollen declined today to comment on the reasons for his action, but said in keeping with his policy he had not "lobbied" other aldermen on the matter.

By noon today no alderman had moved or seconded the motion, although Frampton said he had "no doubt" this would happen.

If no mover or seconder emerges, the motion will not be debatable.

Frampton said he believes the action has come about because of his opposition to Pollen's anti-highrise policy.

Saanich Taxes Increase

Saanich property taxes set Wednesday night are up an average 1.86 mills over 1971.

Council became the first in Greater Victoria to set its 1972 general and debt mill rate, ending three consecutive night sittings.

The general and debt mill rate increase over last year is 2.5 mills, an amount reduced proportionately by the fact that school rates this year are lower.

In 10 hours' total consideration this week the members of council trimmed about $630,000 from 1972 budget estimates to produce a mill rate of 42.75 for debt and general purposes.

About 3.58 mills was thinned out of estimates that originally totalled $6.89 million and would have meant a tax increase of 6.69 mills for debt and general purposes.

School tax rates set previously in districts 61 and 63, in which Saanich lies, will bring the net increase in district 61 to 1.585 mills and in district 63 to 2.135 mills.

In addition, there will be increases for properties within the sewer enterprise area, mostly covered by school district 61, totalling an estimated $30.

Mayor Hugh Curtis expressed surprise and pleasure that so much work had been achieved in a relatively short time and that aldermen had done the job in good humor and without acrimony.

Most of the reductions in spending estimates were made Wednesday, just over $500,000, the balance spread between Monday and Tuesday nights.

Toward the end of the exercise in economy the indicated increase in mill rate was still about .62 higher than council was prepared to accept.

Ald. Alan Newberry said he was not ready to approve a rate hike of more than three mills and that he favored something in the area of 2.5 mills.

Surplus Fund Used

Despite a caution from administrator John Tribe against setting a precedent, Mayor Curtis supported the idea of taking from the accumulated surplus account enough funds to reduce the mill rate increase from 3.12 at that point to 2.5. The motion carried unanimously.

The surplus account, which last year received $279,000, stood at $1.252 million at Dec. 31, Tribe told council.

Ald. Newberry observed that the 2.5 mill increase this year is about equal to 6.5 per cent (actually 6.2 per cent), a senior government guideline on wage and price hikes.

Ald. William Noel said that on a $30,000 home the increase in taxation would work out to about $21.75.

Comptroller-treasurer Roy Broughton worked out illustrations of the new tax rate using a 1971 net taxable assessment of $7,200, indicating a property with market value around $28,000.

Last year the tax on this property, including the school rate but not counting local improvement levies, would be around $523 in School District 61.

Assessments were up in a majority of cases this year, and using 5 per cent increment, the same property as described would have a net taxable assessment of about $7,500.

In the Saanich portion of School District 61 the net increase in taxation on this property will be $34 for a total $557 in tax.

Art Gallery Given Grant For Exhibit

A $14,000 Canada Council grant has been awarded to the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria to publish a catalogue of its Japanese art collection.

Curator Colin Graham said the collection has international status and will be exhibited in December at the Royal Ontario Museum in Toronto and later at the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts.

"For months we have had scholars from the Royal Ontario Museum and the Centre for Asian Arts in Seattle preparing the text for the catalogue," he said. "We have had as many as six scholars at one time at the gallery."

Graham said the catalogue will not only be used for the Toronto and Montreal Exhibition but as a handbook for the collection. It will have a hard cover and color reproductions of some of the art pieces.

He said the Royal Ontario Museum also plans an exhibit in Victoria next spring of its famous Chinese Art collection.

The museum is preparing a handbook for the exhibition.

Jet Age Arrives Like It or Not

Sidney residents are now prepared to accept — grudgingly — the inevitability of regular jet traffic over their area.

But there is one elderly woman, who was once a vociferous opponent of the lengthening of the main runway at Victoria International Airport, who says she has come to love the advent of the jet age, which has occurred right over her rooftop.

The woman, who declined to let her name be used, today described stretched DC8 jets as "great big huge birds coming in over my head soft as a cloud."

She said after the runway was lengthened two years ago "nothing outrageous happened as everybody said it would" and now as she sits in her backyard she thrills to the sight of good flying.

Many Sidney residents are not quite so enchanted by the sound of a jet, but the protests have died down as Air Canada starts regularly scheduled jet flights out of here (see Page 6).

The complaints have ceased because Sidney council recently proposed to put development restrictions on the residential area most affected by noise pollution, explained Mrs. Norma Sealey, who last year as an alderman for the town conducted a study into the problem.

But council dropped rezoning plans when it was "severely reprimanded" by the same people who were complaining.

Mrs. Sealey said they feared that with restricted zoning their property values would drop. "Everybody (near the flight paths) is anxious to unload their property on somebody else."

Ald. Wilkie Gardner of Sidney said residents are prepared to accept regular jet traffic but they are against the commercial jet training flights that zoom around the area.

He said as soon as these jets hit the shoreline at Sidney they rev up their engines and bank away, which creates black smoke and "a violent reaction on the ground."

The noise doesn't seem as bad when jets actually take off and land, and residents have come to realize that "there is nothing they can do about it anyhow."

As a matter of fact, he said, to many people there is "nothing more exciting than planes coming down. It's all a part of the circus."

He added that the elderly woman who now gladly lives under the main flight path is so well-known by pilots that some dip their wings in salute to her as they pass over.

Pollen to London

Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen will be among a party of 17 Canadian mayors visiting the City of London next month as guests of the Lord Mayor, Sir Edward Howard.

The official visit is from May 10 to 13, but Pollen said today he will remain in London until the 16th.

Pollen will be accompanied by his wife. Among their fellow travellers will be Vancouver Mayor Tom Campbell and his wife.

The program includes extensive sightseeing around the city, a visit to the Royal Opera House and dinner at Mansion House — for which Pollen has been asked to bring along his chain of office.

Tugs Help Commuters

That's the view of a man well qualified to assess the situation — bridge operator John Kirkendale, who has been on the job for 26 years.

In the two months since the B.C. Towboat Owners Association asked its members to refrain from using the bridge during certain hours except in cases of emergency, Kirkendale says he has noticed "a big improvement" in the situation.

The tugboat operators, he said Wednesday, appear to be trying to ensure that the bridge isn't raised for their vessels between the peak hours of 7:30 and 8:30 a.m., and 4:30 and 5:30 p.m.

Kirkendale said in some instances this co-operation has extended to the tugs "waiting around" in the Inner Harbor or on the seaward side of the bridge, until road traffic flows have eased.

"I see them there but I don't raise the bridge until they call me up on the radio-telephone," he said.

Entries in the log kept in the bridge operator's shed show that marine use of the bridge during busy hours this week has been minimal.

Out of a total of 20 lifts Monday, only three were at peak hours — 8:25 a.m., 9:05 a.m. and 5:35 p.m.

On Tuesday there were 19 lifts. Seaspan's tug Trojan went out at 7:25 a.m., returned at 8:44 a.m. and went out again at 5:30 p.m.

Only real offender Wednesday was the train-car carrier Grey York, which opened the bridge at 7:50 a.m.

City hall has not yet analysed the bridge log entries of recent weeks, but an official said Wednesday there seems to be all-round improvement in traffic interruption.

Early in February city council asked the transport department in Ottawa for authority to restrict raising of the bridge between 7 and 9 a.m., and from 4 to 6 p.m.

No response came from Ottawa, but meanwhile the B.C. Towboat Owners Association asked members to observe the two daily two-hour restrictions, to head off attempts at enforced closure for double that period.

Question: Who Pays for the Cleanup?

CONSIDER, IF YOU WILL, this hypothetical case.

A merchant ship runs into desperate trouble off our shores. The Canadian Coast Guard rescues her people, but the stricken freighter is past saving.

Bunker oil from her gashed tanks forms a rapidly spreading slick. She carries several hundred tons of fuel — enough if it drifts inshore to turn beaches black and play the very devil with resident and migratory waterfowl.

Our Department of Transport, with an assist from National Defence, gets busy. Containing booms are rigged, and oil-gathering equipment rushed to the area.

Naturally, all this costs. The bill may run into hundreds of thousands of dollars. In the case of a major oil spill, it could go much higher. The question that then arises is, who's going to pay?

If the ship carries and maintains a seaworthiness certificate issued by Lloyds Register or one of a few other strictly governed regulatory bodies, answers can be arrived at. A master mariner who feels strongly that Canada should amend her maritime laws explains it this way, taking Lloyds as his example:

"A rigid system ensures that the certificate is kept current through inspections.

"If the certificate lapses so does the insurance, effectively crippling the operation of that ship."

He adds that most first class shipping, regardless of flag, operates under Lloyds survey or the equivalent.

Let us suppose, though, that the cargo carrier of our hypothesis is not a first-class ship.

The fact that she sailed under "a flag of convenience" — Liberian or Panamanian, perhaps — doesn't necessarily mean that she lacks valid certification. But under an obligingly tolerant government, it very well may, and in this instance, it does.

To Lloyds or its equivalent body, she is a dimming memory. Her seaworthiness certificate is long lapsed. The spoor of her actual owners leads through the front door of a dummy company and out the back.

Suspicion may point to a multi-corporation or to a one-ship operator who has gambled his bucket of bolts against the sea's hazards. But suspicion is not proof, and proof may be much harder to find than a good deed in a naughty world.

So, once more quoting our irked master mariner, the question of who pays could lead to this ultimate answer:

"Good old Joe, the Canadian taxpayer. And I think we should be doing more to ensure that he doesn't wind up getting stuck with the bill."

His solution?

Not to establish and man control centres which would shepherd ships to our ports from 200 miles offshore at enormous cost to Canada.

And not to attempt regulations which could be invoked only when or if some oil-spewing cripple has limped or been assisted into a Canadian harbor. By that time, the damage has been done.

"What we should have for our own protection," he says, "is a law with teeth that would head off trouble at the source.

"No ship which cannot produce a current seaworthiness certificate or its equivalent should be allowed into Canadian waters. Possession of such a certificate is our guarantee that a ship is structurally sound, and that it has properly certified officers, equipment and crew.

"We should also insist on proof of liability from the owners to be furnished before any ship sails for a Canadian port."

To those strong words, this veteran seafarer added a disturbing thought.

The tremendous oil carriers that all too soon may be travelling a charted route off our British Columbia coast will be first class ships, certified to a fare-ye-well and efficiently manned. They will be as accident-proof as any ship that plies great waters can be. Although there's little comfort in the fact, Canada will know who to bill, or sue if necessary, in the event of oil damage.

We should be worrying less about oil trouble from that source, he suggests, and much more about ill-found vessels that come and go scarce-noticed while oil routes are debated.

WENDY DEY - EDITOR

By KENNETH TURAN
Special to The Times

WASHINGTON — It was nice, the man said, to see girls on the river.

Not parading or lollygagging, mind, but straining with a grimacing gracefulness, backs bent and arms moving almost in unison, rowing a four-woman shell down the Potomac.

Not hammer thrower types either, with thighs like fire hydrants and bazooka arms, but lithe, amiable girls next door, George Washington University students who row not in a maniacal striving for endless victories, but because they think it's fun.

Six days a week, at a barely civilized 7:30 a.m., they troop out of Thompson's Boat House, a sleek, varnished place where long wooden blades and longer shells are piled one upon the other in a manner that bespeaks the civility of what was once the pastime of gentlemen.

The reaction from some peers has been less pleasing. Chauvinistic males have asked to feel the girls' muscles — Clare Brunstetter's boy friend claims that ladies are not to use their muscles — and "you should hear what my mother thinks," said non-swearing coxswain Mary Ellen Swift, known as Swifty, who swam the Potomac to prove that it wouldn't bite. "You won't die from it," she reported. "It's not instant death," as has been broadcast.

A general call last fall brought out a number of women to test the waters, enough to merit a boat of their own. Some of the originals have left, new people have joined, and now there are six: Betty Lou Pontius, Karen Leslie, Teresa Cahill, plus Mss. Brunstetter, Swift and Leredu.

"I dated a crew coach last year and that was all he talked about," said Ms. Pontius, more familiarly known as "Luger." "He was a real fanatic, and those were our dates, nothing but him always saying how good this or that was. I decided to find out for myself."

Finding out eventually included enduring a winter of appearing at 6 a.m. to partake of a series of toughening exercises, working up to a minimum of 75 each of push-ups, situps, deep knee bends, jumping jacks, universals and more followed by a mile run.

Drug-Success Link Refuted

CHICAGO (CP) — A group of investigators have reported finding little difference in grades and participation in athletics and student activities between college seniors who experimented with drugs and those who did not.

The researchers, from Harvard University, reported in Archives of General Psychiatry that drug use appeared to be related to differences in self-concept, values and attitudes which were present before drug use began. The archives is a specialty publication of the American Medical Association.

The authors distributed questionnaries to a representative group of 517 Harvard seniors. They found that:

● Sixty-nine per cent of the seniors said they had used an illegal drug at least once. Even allowing for sampling error and distortion in replies, the non-users clearly were in the minority.

● Two-thirds said they had tried marijuana only; one-fourth reported experimentation with hallucinogens, amphetamines and occasionally opiates and cocaine.

● More than half of all users had tried drugs more than 10 times; fewer than one-tenth reported only a single experience.

● The only drug which correlated consistently with lower grades was alcohol.

● Grades did not change significantly following the beginning of marijuana use.

● There was no essential difference in college activities between users and non-users.

● Significantly more users had less definite career plans than non-users.

The only real difference between users and non-users were found in the student's personal lives:

1. Visits to a psychiatrist. There was a strong correlation between drug use and visits to a psychiatrist. Since half the users saw a psychiatrist before they became users, this statistic suggested that users suffered from problems not directly related to drug use.

2. The degree to which students saw themselves as "alienated from American society." Although drug users appeared to differ little from non-users in many of their outward activities, they did suffer in the distance they felt from traditional society and their place in it.

3. Sexual activity. This was the most marked distinguishing characteristic of drug users. Among both men and women, fewer than half of the non-users reported having had intercourse; the intermediate users averaged 80 per cent, and the most involved user groups nearly 100 per cent. Authors felt the increase in sexual activity among users was a part of a search for varied experiences in the sexual, social and political spheres on the part of the users.

Researchers concluded that drug use had little influence on the significant differences between users and non-users. They felt that these differences characterized the drug user before he even inhaled his first puff or swallowed his first tablet.

"It is not the drug that determines the use," they said, "but the personality of the user that determines the drug, and the use to which he puts it."

Fabric Labelling Laws Aid to Care of Clothing

For the housewife who has been lost in a maze of new fabric names, help is on the way.

At a Wednesday afternoon forum at Camosun College entitled Caring for New Fabrics and Finishes, some 100 housewives and home economics students were given the message on how new textile labelling will help the consumer recognize just what he is buying. Most of us are familiar with the properties of acrilan, orlon or bri-nylon, but what is Cupron? How would you wash it?

Must Specify Content

Miss Lois Smith, consumer consultant for the Pacific region of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs explained that the new Textile Labelling Act requires manufacturers to specify the fibre content of almost every article they produce. From next December, articles prescribed under the act (and these include many items, from dress fabrics to tents and floor coverings) must carry the following three pieces of information: the generic or family name of each fibre present in any amount exceeding 5%, the percentage content of each fibre and the name and address of the dealer responsible for labelling.

Labels must be tough enough to withstand ten washings or dry cleanings. False information or claims on a label can bring penalties for the manufacturer.

Voluntary Symbols

The Textile Labelling Act is mandatory, but Miss Smith said her department is also urging textile producers to include how to label a series of colored symbols, patterned On European models, which indicate how to clean and dry the material concerned.

Frank Smart, manager of the fabrics department of a large down-town store, admitted the new labelling might result in some increase in the price of finished articles, but estimated this would take some time to reach the consumer.

Wednesday's forum was co-sponsored by the Victoria branch of the Consumers' Association of Canada and Camosun College's community services division.

Journal Supports Iron Increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Journal of the American Medical Association has thrown its support behind a U.S. government proposal to double the amount of iron in white bread and flour. It acted over objections from about 200 doctors who fear it might increase cases of a rare and fatal disease.

"Final decision has been delayed twice since the proposal was first announced two years ago in deference to this group," the editorial said.

The editorial in the current issue of the Journal was written by Dr. C. E. Butterworth of the University of Alabama Medical Centre. He is vice-chairman of the AMA's council on foods and nutrition which also supports the FDA proposal.

The FDA proposed a requirement that iron fortification of wheat flour be raised to 40 milligrams from 15 milligrams a pound and enriched bread, buns and rolls to 25 mg. from eight-to-12.5.

The old standards have been unchanged since they were adopted 30 years ago to help replace some of the nutrients found in wholewheat flour.

Opposing more iron in bread is a group of physicians led by Dr. William H. Crosby, chief of hematology at the New England Medical Centre Hospitals in Boston.

He argues that doubling iron enrichment might accelerate damage by undiagnosed hemochromatosis, which he calls a terrible disease that "eventually destroys the liver, heart, testes or pancreas."

Grapefruit Diet 'Fraud'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Postal Service, coming to the aid of overwieght people "desperate" for a reducing shortcut, has begun a crackdown on fraudulent promotion of grapefruit diets.

The service said one promoter made $250,000 in illicit earnings receiving as many as 1,000 letters daily requesting $2 copies of a worthless diet based on grapefruit.

"Overweight people do get desperate about finding a quick and easy shortcut to weight loss," Postal Service attorney Thomas Ziebarth said in duscussing the crackdown.

Dr. Vincent F. Cordaro, medical review officer for the Food and Drug Administration, said grapefruit has no special properties or capabilities for weight reduction, but could have ill effects on persons with abnormal heart or kidney conditions.

Barber Syrt on Hairstyling

What is the difference between a barber and a hairstylist? While the barber is trained to simply cut the hair, the hairstylist is trained to trim hair to suit the face, to give more individuality. A round face is counterbalanced by a squarish cut. To soften and shorten a long face, the hair is left as thick as possible on the sides, with a round cut on top. A face with bony structure and a large nose can be helped by a soft and face-framing cut (a severe cut would create a death-mask look). Therefore: Select your stylist with great care.

People, Not Houses, Real Fire Hazard

By DAVID MAY
Times Staff

The completely fire-proof home is a possibility.

It would have walls of concrete construction, two-way flame-rated doors, reinforced glass windows and an elaborate water-sprinkler system, to mention only a few of its precautionary measures.

It would also have to remain vacant. However ingenious the devices to prevent fire, humans always manage to foul things up.

The average householder, living in his frame construction home, with its open hearth, wood-panelled sitting room, garbage, matches and children may be excused if at times he thinks he's sitting on a potential powderkeg.

In fact, when a family moves into any dwelling, it brings with it, on average, 10 to 20 pounds of combustible material per square foot of living space.

According to Victoria Fire Department's 1971 statistics, the greatest single cause of fire alarms was smoking in bed. The last gasper before bedtime accounted for 96 out of a total 931 alarms.

Next came car and auto fires, frequently the outcome of using gasoline to clean auto parts.

The only acceptable place for gasoline is in your car's tank, says the fire department; a Victoria bylaw limits to one gallon the amount of additional fuel a person may store in a safety approved screw-top can.

"One cupful of gas is equal to a stick of dynamite," says Deputy Fire Chief Carl Coates. Coates is at a loss to understand how people, aware of what force ignited gasoline produces to drive a car, can risk using it as a cleaning fluid, especially when there are naked flames around.

Children playing with matches lay at the root of many of the grass, bush and garbage fires that figured high on the alarm list. But children are always fascinated by fire and this fact has served as a starting point for Chief Fire Prevention Officer Arthur G. Leason.

"We go to the children at school and talk to them about what causes fires. We ask them about how they would get out of an upper bedroom if the stairs were burning. That way, the children go home and get father thinking about solutions to Operation EDITH." (EDITH, or Exit Drills In The Home, is the procedure which every family should work out to suit the needs of their particular dwelling.)

In fact, the law can compel Mr. Average Householder to do very little to make his house safe from fire, unless the condition of his property is likely to be a danger to his neighbors.

There are some areas in which the householder should be aware of how the law can make him toe the safety line.

Any house conversion, involving more than $25 in modifications, requires that drawings of the proposed changes be submitted for fire department approval. This ruling covers all cases, from the "wee extra bedroom downstairs" to the conversion of an old mansion into a rooming house.

The fire department now makes an annual tour of some 1,900 Victoria apartment-type dwellings, to ensure that minimum standards are maintained.

For the private individual in a one-family home, the fire department can only appeal to the owner's sanity to install a rope ladder (or knotted rope substitute) in upper bedrooms for emergency exits, to have a fire extinguisher in the kitchen, and to make children aware of the dangers of fire.

It would appear that such appeals are, sadly, not enough. Fire Prevention Officer Leason described the case of one elderly man whose carelessness brought out the fire department's trucks and men, on five different occasions. Most of this man's fires were caused by smoking, also the cause of Victoria's one fire death last year.

'Space Triumph Can Be Domestic Disaster'

HOUSTON (AP) — Behind the fame, the courage and the triumph of an astronaut's space adventure, the fabric of family and personal life is stretched, as one spaceman put it, "to an intolerable level of pressure."

With the recent marital breakup of the Gordon Coopers, six astronauts or former astronauts have been divorced and at least one, Edwin Aldrin, has undergone psychiatric therapy.

Astronaut marriages, to outward appearances, were stable for the first nine years of the space program. The first announced break came when astronaut Don Eisele and his wife of 11 years separated and divorced in 1969. Eisele remarried shortly afterward.

There followed the divorces of Alfred Worden, Edgar Mitchell and John Young. Worden was divorced prior to his Apollo 15 moon mission and Young, the Apollo 16 commander, was divorced six months ago. Young also has remarried. Mitchell was divorced a few months after he walked the moon on Apollo 14. Cooper and Scott Carpenter were both divorced after leaving the space program.

The statistics for the space program.

Seventy-three astronauts selected; two were bachelors; eight married astronauts died in accidents; of the 63 remaining marriages, six have broken up in divorce.

The very nature of the astronauts' business — the intensive training, the danger, the brutal competition for mission assignments and the hot glare of public scrutiny — creates a pressure-cooker existence for the space frontiersmen.

Prior to 1969, the pressures were just as intense but, said one astronaut, "A guy was unwilling to risk his career to get a divorce."

This, said the astronaut, was to protect "the astronaut image of the clean-cut American male."

A BOY AND HIS FRIEND

Cheetah, a two-year-old red-tailed hawk, and Jeff Smythe, a 14-year-old Toronto boy, have been friends since the boy found the bird when it was too young to fly. Now it perches on his head or shoulder, takes flying lessons, and eats meat out of his hand. Jeff has applied for permission to keep Cheetah permanently.

Machine Strips Romance From Function of Heart

TORONTO (CP) — A bank of overhead lights, artificial sunshine, beams through the sterile drapings that frame a brief mating of man and machine.

Pink and pulsing, the patient's heart lies on a piece of cloth. A mechanical pump is switched on, and while the surgeon cuts, flesh and a piece of metal will be fused.

The pump carries out the function of heart and lungs while the patient undergoes open-heart surgery.

The human heart, for centuries considered the seat of the emotions, now is viewed by surgeons merely as a device which must function properly or be repaired — or replaced.

Gain Acceptance

Machines and artificial materials are gaining acceptance as dependable substitutes for heart tissue.

At Toronto Western Hospital, a portable by-pass pump has saved the lives of some patients dying of heart attacks by taking over the bulk of the job of circulation while the heart has a short rest.

Artificial heart valves, as well as those taken from human donors, frequently are used to replace defective valves in a patient.

Researchers are trying to develop an artificial heart that could be transplanted instead of one from a human donor.

Thousands of Canadians now use battery-equipped pacemakers, which keep their hearts beating steadily. The device was developed in 1951 by Dr. W. G. Bigelow of Toronto and Dr. John Callaghan of Edmonton.

To install a pacemaker, an electrode is slipped in along the main vein of the body to touch the heart and a battery pack is implanted under the skin of the chest.

Since the batteries wear out every two or three years, patients must be monitored regularly and doctors now are setting up ways of checking pacemakers by telephone.

Dr. Bernard Goldman of Toronto General Hospital, who is in the process of setting up such a system for all 300 of the hospital's pacemaker patients, complains that technology still is not able to match nature.

"It seems amazing that we can send people to the moon but can't get a battery that will last longer than two years," he says.

Respect That Privacy

DEAR ABBY: I must comment on mothers who go through their teen-agers' drawers and read their personal mail. Don't they know that the way to teach their children to respect the privacy of others is to practise it? You also teach love by practising it.

I raised three children, and they always came to me with their little problems because they knew that I would always listen, and comfort them even when they did wrong, and not condemn. Maybe that is why they never had any big problems.

I know a mother who kicked her 17-year-old daughter out of the house because she found out she had had a love affair. Kicked her own daughter right out into the street! Of course the poor child went to live with her boy friend. Where else? She soon became pregnant, and then her mother cried, "I tried to be a good mother. . . . how could she do this to ME?"

I just don't understand some people, Abby. — Baffled.

DEAR BAFFLED: That makes two of us. (P.S.: Some of the most wonderful mothers in the world raised their families in your town. Mine did.)

DEAR ABBY: My parents will soon be celebrating their 50th wedding anniversary. My older brother has been dead for several years. He left a wife and four children. His widow has recently remarried, and she told me that she would like to stand in the receiving line at the golden wedding reception!

Is this considered proper etiquette? And how would you handle it if you were in my position?—Touchy Subject.

DEAR TOUCHY: I would be less concerned with "proper etiquette" and more concerned with hurting the least number of people possible. If she wants to stand in the receiving line, and your parents have no objections, welcome her.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Forecast for Fri., April 28, 1972

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be factual where money promises are concerned. Mate, partner may be involved in plan which is costly. Draw in reins. Review information. Avoid wishful thinking. Take inventory. Delve into mystery. You gain if perceptive.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Check individual who makes claim to numerous credentials, references. Protect yourself in clinches. Take special care when it comes to affixing signature to special documents. Caution now is your ally.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Recognition due from past efforts. Aries is involved. You are repaid for being a good and patient listener. Associate, co-worker confides problem. Don't cast first stone. What you give will be returned.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Creative juices flow. You are able to imprint own style. Accent is on change, travel, variety. Stress independence, originality. Lead rather than follow. Differences can be settled. You emerge with greater prestige.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Maintain moderate pace. Hold off on decisions concerning property, home, basic security. If you are not sure, do nothing. Spiritual outlook is accented. Find out why you are here — and where you are going.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be versatile. Have alternatives at hand. Avoid spreading efforts in too many directions. One who spreads rumors is trying to goad you. Sagittarian could be involved. You get backing from surprise source.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): If persistent, you collect what you need. Genuine bargain is available. Traditional methods, however, may not suffice. Be willing to utilize innate ingenuity. Track down leads. Ask questions and obtain answers.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Obtain hint from Libra message. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Cycle is such that you can get what you go after. Key is to know what it is you are seeking. You may be called on to make special appearance.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Make conciliatory gesture to family member. Co-operate in project aimed at helping those who are handicapped. Taurus and Libra persons figure prominently. Maintain low profile. Let others reveal their policies.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Promises may be empty. Know this and demand collateral. It is not easy to fool you, but you can do a pretty good job of fooling yourself. Realize this and go after facts. Then you land on your feet.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Practical approach now serves your best interests. Placate family member who resents career ambitions. Make intelligent compromise. Avoid any tendency toward extremes. You have more going for you than might be imagined.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your extrasensory perception works overtime. Heed inner feelings. Don't be dissuaded by one who is skeptical and jealous. Plan for vacation. Be open to change and travel. Refuse to be shackled by non-productive routine.

Miracle of Light

JELLY SIDE DOWN

nancy stahl

Personally, I prefer soft light. Not only are firelight, candlelight, and even wooden matches (stuck in a bar of soap) quite romantic, but they also blessedly fail to illuminate the pile of last month's newspapers, swim fins, and apple cores in the corner.

The children, especially enjoy eating by candlelight because no one can tell whether or not they have washed their hands.

Candlelight often helps an otherwise pathetic meal. "I don't mind eating this stuff," my husband will muse while wolfing down a bite of salmon loaf. "But I'm sure glad that I don't have to look at it."

Even our dog likes candlelight suppers. Candlelight provides the perfect cover for the children to slip nearly all of their salmon loaf to him under the table.

My friend's not so lucky. Her husband has insisted upon using five sixty-watt bulbs in their dining room chandelier. He has thereby effectively transformed their dining room into what could best be described as a French Provincial operating theatre.

The one time that we joined them for dinner, we gathered around the roast like a surgical team. Unfortunately, the patient was "rare-rare," I lost complete control of myself, began screaming for clamps and sutures while patting our host's forehead with my linen napkin. I eventually passed out cold into the mashed potatoes.

I apologized later to our hostess for my outburst. "Don't worry," she said. "It's those darned dining room lights. And it's not just the dining room. He's changed every light bulb in the entire house to 150 watts, except the one in the refrigerator. He tried one in there, too, but every time we opened the refrigerator door, the heat from the bulb curdled the milk."

"You don't ever eat by candlelight, do you?" I asked.

"Not unless we're having salmon loaf."

Driver Joke True?

LONDON (UPI) — A British research team says it is possible — only — that women may be worse drivers than men.

That is as far as the government's transport and road research laboratory would go.

Reporting on a seven-month study of road accident investigation near the laboratory's headquarters at Crowthorne, the investigators said there was no evidence to indicate women were more likely to be involved in an accident in the first place.

The study simply found that women drivers more often than men were found to be responsible for the accidents in which they were involved, according to a laboratory spokesman.

"It is valid to say that women were worse than men. But we could not generalize to say that they always are," the spokesman said.

The report also said drivers under 20 or over 60 were most often responsible for the accidents in which they were involved.

Ladysmith SD to Dissolve

LADYSMITH — Ladysmith school trustees plan to split the district and then dissolve by September 1, trustee Beatty Davis said this morning.

The Chemainus portion of the school district will be amalgamated with Cowichan school district while Ladysmith north will be joined with Nanaimo school district.

Davis said the board unanimously agreed to accept the recommendation to split after they had met with a committee appointed by Education Minister Donald Brothers Tuesday morning.

"We have been assured by the committee of the minister's that the amalgamation will be completed before the start of the next school term," Davis said.

In a previous Times story board chairman Dr. Gerald Philippson stressed something had to be done to help the school district because "students are getting inferior education."

Philippson said that with the limited school budget (just over $2 million this year) and the limited number of students (2,600) the district is unable to offer a wide range of programs.

Philippson said students are receiving "adequate" academic education but are being passed by in vocational courses leading to employment following high school or apprenticeships.

Cowichan school board chairman Dave Bradbury feels the split is a "good move and should be beneficial to all concerned, including the students."

Job Hunter Helped

LAKE COWICHAN — A creative job search course to help people become aware of their qualifications and potential and give them confidence while looking for employment is being offered at the Lake Cowichan Secondary School Wednesday evenings.

The course, which is given at no charge to participants, is sponsored by the district's adult education program and Community Activity Centre.

Instructor Stuart Beaveridge, formerly of Vancouver, said the sessions are aimed at people currently unemployed or under employed, students about to come into the labor market, people working part time wanting fulltime employment and housewives planning to return to work in the future.

Beaveridge said most people just require two sessions where they are advised where most employers do hire, how, and what qualities they are looking for.

"We stress the fact that every person has potential," he said. "The point of the whole course is to help discover their potential identity it and organize it in a presentable way."

Beaveridge said each person is required to do a complete inventory on themselves and they leave the course with 14 copies of resumes to distribute while applying for jobs.

"The course has been successfully used in Oregon, Vancouver, and Victoria with 70 to 80 per cent of those completing it finding work within a few weeks," Beaveridge said.

Beaveridge and his assistant Carolyn Ewing, both instructors at the Lake Cowichan Community Activity Centre, said they will teach the course on a continuous basis as long as it is required.

WATER OFF

GOLDSTREAM AVENUE - WALE ROAD - ISLAND HIGHWAY

Water service will be off between 8:00 p.m. Friday, April 28th, and 8:00 a.m. Saturday, April 29th, on Goldstream Avenue, between Station and Wale Road, on Wale Road and on the Island Highway between Wilfert and Wale Roads, and on some side roads leading off these three main roads. In this general area, some customers are fed by another system which will still be in service but with low pressures.

This shutdown is for the purpose of installing a 42-inch valve in a 48 inch pipeline on Wale Road. Customers in these areas are advised to watch for entrained air which may erupt from their taps on Saturday morning.

The Lord is my shepherd: I shall not want.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He leadeth me beside the still waters.

He restoreth my soul: He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.

Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.

8 CARDS OF THANKS

We wish to express our sincere thanks to our relatives, friends and neighbours for their many acts of kindness in our recent bereavement in the loss of our dear wife and mother. Special thanks to the doctors, nurses and medical staff of the Jubilee Hospital.

YOUR HEALTH: Dr. Walter Alvarez

Adhesions Baffling to Diagnose

Any person who has had an operation or an acute inflammation of some organ in his abdomen can have adhesions, which usually means that two loops of bowel are stuck together. Occasionally this produces some obstruction of the bowel, causing abdominal pain and indigestion, but often adhesions cause no recognizable symptoms.

In 1917, for a few hours I sat in a dark room beside the late Dr. Russell Carman, then one of the greatest X-ray men in the country, watching him X-ray the stomachs and bowels of some 45 Mayo Clinic patients.

When he was done I said I was interested to see that he did not once diagnose abdominal adhesions.

He said, "No: I used to try to diagnose them, but later, when I would watch a surgeon as he opened the patient's abdomen, I found I had either failed to diagnose adhesions that were there, or I had diagnosed adhesions that were not there, so I gave up and quit."

Only rarely in my many years of practice have I dared diagnose adhesions, and my impression is that today few surgeons operate "for adhesions." Curiously, if the person has a tendency to form adhesions, another operation will simply cause more of them to form.

When a person is complaining of distress, and X-ray films suggest a number of adhesions, I prefer to talk with the patient to determine if the abdominal symptoms may be due to some psychic cause, such as can often bring pain and discomfort in the abdomen. I would want to discover another more probable source of the abdominal symptoms. At an autopsy I once saw that a man's abdomen was a solid mass of adhesions. When I asked the man's widow if he had suffered from indigestion or abdominal pain, she said, "No, he had the digestion of an ostrich."

Major Shakeup in External Affairs

OTTAWA (CP) — A wholesale shakeup in the upper echelons of the external affairs department, involving the reassignment of Canada's first ambassador to the Chinese People's Republic, was announced Wednesday.

Jean-Louis Gagnon, 59, of Montreal, director-general of Information Canada, was named ambassador to UNESCO in Paris.

Returning to Ottawa as an assistant undersecretary after less than a year in Peking is Ralph Collins, 57, of Ottawa.

He is expected to take over his old job as assistant undersecretary for political affairs.

Also named as assistant undersecretary was D'Iberville Fortier, 46, of Montreal, at present ambassador to Tunisia.

He is expected to replace Pierre-Andre Bissonnette, 47, of Montreal, as assistant undersecretary of legal affairs.

Bissonnette is being transferred to London as deputy high commissioner, succeeding R. L. Rogers.

The appointments will take effect "during the course of the next few months," said the announcement by External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp.

Yvon Beaulne, 53, of Ottawa, now ambassador to the United Nations in New York, is being recalled to Ottawa as chief of protocol, replacing Jean Cote.

His job at the UN will be taken by Saul Rae, 57, of Portland, Ont., now ambassador to Mexico.

Arthur Menzies, 55, of Ottawa, at present high commissioner to Australia, will become Canada's ambassador to the North Atlantic Council in Brussels, succeeding Ross Campbell.

Alfred Pick, 56, of Montreal, ambassador to the Netherlands, becomes the first Canadian ambassador and permanent observer to the Organization of American States in Washington.

New appointments of the men displaced in the shuffle, but not immediately named to new jobs, will be announced later, said Sharp.

The announcement means that a number of posts may be left temporarily in the care of charge d'affaires until new ambassadors are chosen.

Collins, a native of China, studied at the University of Alberta and a number of other institutions including Harvard and Oxford. He is a 31-year veteran of the external affairs department.

Attica Film Shows Assault Preceded Surrender Order

NEW YORK (AP) — Film of the state police assault on Attica prison, shown in public for the first time, shows that prisoners were not ordered to surrender until four minutes after state troopers launched their assault to retake the prison.

The reason, says Col. John C. Miller, was that the order was announced over a loudspeaker in a state police helicopter which had to wait until two National Guard helicopters dropping tear gas had cleared out. That took about four minutes.

Miller, first deputy superintendent of the state police, viewed the state police film Wednesday at the latest hearing of the commission investigating the entire episode at Attica last September.

The roar of the helicopters and the noise of gunfire punctuated the 16-minute narrated film that covers the period from when state police and other authorities cautiously moved in until subdued prisoners were made to crawl through muddy ground.

HELD 38 HOSTAGES

Heavy clouds of tear gas and immobilizing gas settled near the ground in the yard of the prison where more than 1,200 rebelling prisoners held 38 hostages.

Thirty-nine prisoners and hostages were killed by authorities in the actual assault Sept. 13 by state police, correction officers and the Genesee County park police. Three prisoners and a hostage died earlier.

Depositions introduced at the commission hearing stated that 189 troopers fired 364 rounds, 17 correction officers fired 74 rounds and the Genesee police fired 12 rounds.

The film showed three clusters of prisoners, each holding a blindfolded hostage at the intersection of the four catwalks known as "Times Square." "They have knives at their throats," the narrator said.

Mill Hill Subdivision Planned

Application has been made to the Capital Regional District for subdivision of 55.5 acres on the southern slope of Mill Hill south of Thetis Lake Park.

Owners Ted and Nellie Cuckovich, 442 Atkins, stated in the application that about 203 building lots could be developed after allowing for small parks, recreation areas and roads.

The regional board voted Wednesday to refer the application to the local planning committee with a report to come from the planning department.

The applicants are seeking to have the subdivision created under section 702-A of the Municipal Act dealing with land use contracts.

They said sewers will be provided, with disposal, after secondary treatment, into a drainage field created by land fill and "a portion of the liquid will be used for underground irrigation of the park itself."

TOO MANY CAR CRUSHERS

A Sidney man who built his own car-crusher more than a year ago said Wednesday the provincial government car disposal scheme is not only uneconomic but deprives him of a job.

Irvin Doud, 2255 James White Boulevard, is annoyed that neither the federal nor the provincial government has taken advantage of his offer to carry out a car disposal program on Vancouver Island.

Last September Doud offered his services to the provincial government and was told by Conservation Minister Ken Kiernan that there was no need for such a service in the Greater Victoria area.

RESERVE CLEANUP

In January, Doud and a neighbor, C. T. Taft, 2252 James White Boulevard, wrote to David Anderson, Liberal MP Esquimalt-Saanich, suggesting a program of car cleanup on 19 Indian reservations, utilizing native help under a local initiatives scheme.

This letter was unanswered.

Doud also criticized the purchase by the provincial government of car crushers from the United States.

"These could have been built in Victoria, creating more work here," he said. "At this rate we will all be unemployed."

The government car disposal plan is scheduled to start on the Saanich Peninsula early this summer in conjunction with the Capital Region District.

The government fee schedule of $5 for compaction of the first 50 cars in any one location is completely unrealistic, Doud said.

"It costs up to $23, including labor and equipment, to strip a car of engine and upholstery and load it on to the compacter."

Doud has obtained permission from Central Saanich to set up his operation in the Keating Cross Road gravel pit and will start work there Friday. He is under contract with Tsartlip and Tsawout Indian band councils to pick up and crush more than 300 cars.

COMPETITION

Meanwhile, two partners in a Langford car-wrecking company say the Capital Regional District is "poking its nose where it doesn't belong."

Terry Henderson and Glen Raymond of Associated Auto Wreckers, 2015 Millstream, said the district is "going into competition with private enterprise if it brings the provincial government's car-crushing units into this area."

They said they are "pretty hot" about the competition, adding that they crushed more than 1,000 junk cars last year, sending the metal to the lower mainland for recycling.

"The regional board knows about our operation and yet it wants the government to compete with us," said Henderson.

"It's the same thing as a flower grower raising spring flowers for the Easter market and suddenly have the government be asked by the regional board to give all the mothers in the land free bouquets for Easter."

WATER CONSUMERS
IN GREATER VICTORIA
Discolored Water — Low Pressure

All water consumers served by the Greater Victoria Water District are warned that between 8 p.m. Friday, April 28 and Sunday, April 30, 1972, water may be discolored and pressure lower than normal.

The District will be installing a 42 inch valve in the 48 inch diameter pipeline into Victoria, starting at 8:00 p.m. Friday and work should be completed early Saturday morning. While this work is going on, the 48 inch pipeline will be out of service and water will be routed through smaller pipelines where the higher velocities may pick up sediment and rust and scatter it into parts of the distribution system.

The water will be safe to consume, and any discoloration should disappear by Sunday, but please check for discoloration or sediment before commencing any washing or process requiring clean water.

Open Space Advisors

The Capital Regional District Board appointed its first open-space advisory committee Wednesday.

Preparation of draft terms of reference will be handled by the district's executive committee.

On the committee are Saanich parks administrator Bert Richman and former city parks chief Herb Warren.

Other members are Dr. R. G. McMinn, a research scientist; John Priestman, consulting engineer; H. W. Nasmith, head of an engineering consulting company; John Di Castri, architect; Dr. Gordon Bertram, an economics professor; Gordon Rolston, managing director of Broadmead Farms land development company; Dr. C. N. Forward, urban geographer; and Brian Roberts, a lawyer.

Team Top Draw At Horse Show

Black Clydesdales hitched to a five-ton distillery wagon are features of the third annual old-time horse show to be held Sunday at Saanichton fairground.

The eight-horse team of Scottish draft animals is coming to Vancouver Island for the first time and will parade through downtown Victoria Saturday morning.

CLASSIC WAGON

Its sponsor is Potter Distilleries Ltd., of Langley, who have had a classic wagon custom-built of English white oak and African mahogany, including a number of oaken casks. Harness is all patent leather and chrome.

The only team of its kind in Canada and one of three in North America, the matched Clydesdales travel in their own 40-foot highway trailer and are kept to a special diet. Two thousand pounds is a lot of weight to watch.

Parade route through Victoria will be from Garbally Road along Douglas to Fort, Blanshard, Bay, Douglas, Mayfair shopping centre, Douglas and back to Garbally Road B.C. Hydro bus depot.

The show itself starts Sunday at 10 a.m. and except for a short lunch break preceded and followed by a demonstration of the Clydesdales, will continue through 4 p.m.

It is organized by the All Driving Horse Show Group of Victoria and consists of all breeds found on Vancouver Island, plus visitors from the mainland and U.S. with rigs ranging from pony carts to once-fashionable buggies and commercial wagons.

Patterson Raceway is sending sulkies with drivers in racing silks drawn by standardbred horses; Arabians, Morgans, Hackney, Shetland and Welsh ponies will be shown, in all demonstrating 20 different kinds of driving.

$2,000 for Drugs

The provincial government has made a $4,000 grant to the B.C. Parkinson's Disease Association.

Health Minister Ralph Loffmark said, "It is intended that $2,000 of this sum will be used to assist with association's administrative costs and the other $2,000 will be used for the purchase of drugs."

Lease Approved

Capital Regional District Board gave its approval Wednesday to a five-year lease for the privately-owned Wooded Wonderland in Beaver Lake Park, Saanich.

The lease extension is subject to consideration of the terms and conditions of Saanich.

Wonderland owner Alf Petterson, whose two-year lease runs out this year, had made a bid earlier for a longer lease. He had told Saanich council he needs a longer lease for financing to make improvements.

In another decision, the board referred the question of leasing of regional district parkland to the chairman of parks committee for study and report.

Student Tops Math Contest

A student of Mount Douglas high school has placed first on Vancouver Island in a Canada-wide mathematics competition.

Derek Bissell, a Grade 11 srudent, was the top scoring Vancouver Island student among the 19,428 Canadian entrants of the competition.

Mount Douglas also placed as the top school on the island and ranked fifth in the province, behind Vancouver's Point Grey, Winston Churchil, Carson Graham and St. George's. Mount View high school placed second on the island.

Sidney Flower Show To Be Held on Saturday

Just in time to catch the last of the daffodils and the first tulips in the same show, the Sidney and North Saanich Garden Club sponsors its 18th annual Spring Flower Show in Sanscha Hall in Sidney Saturday.

It seems only a short time since this club was founded and soon afterwards made its first show effort. As with most local garden clubs, the spring flower show at Sidney has improved each year, until today their bulb flower classes rank high on Vancouver Island.

The show will be open from 1:30 until 4:30 p.m. only, which seems a pity when we note almost 100 classes listed in the schedule for competition.

* * *

The staging of entries alone entails a tremendous amount of work as we know from experience. If more publicity for the show could be worked up in Victoria and the lower half of Vancouver Island, perhaps more visitors from further afield would attend this fine show were it open over a longer period.

Two large sections for decorative arrangements are listed, one for experienced the other for novice exhibitors. Included also are classes for separate spring flowers — wallflowers, polyanthuses, anemones, pansies; blooms of camellia and rhododendron; and a collection of flowering shrub and tree branches.

Specimen blooms of narcissi and tulips will likely be the highlight of the show. The cool weather has been perfect for developing these flowers slowly and holding them at perfection. Provided that no gale-force winds are experienced between time of writing and Saturday morning the display should be of superior quality this year.

* * *

Another factor in these flowers remaining so long in good condition is that the cool weather curtailed activities of bees and other pollinating insects. Once flowers are pollinated, they quickly show deterioration since their purpose in life has been fulfilled.

Miniature gardens for children under seven should be worth seeing, as should the "creations" and pictures from living plant material in the same sections. Youngsters need encouragement from parents to get started, they themselves furnish the imagination.

If you are a newcomer to Victoria and know Sidney only from your arrival at airport or ferry, you owe Sidney a return visit on Saturday taking in the flower show and discovering what a delightful community lies at the far end of the peninsula.

SOLUTION FRIDAY

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

In the National Mixed Pairs Championship of 1971, the winners were Mr. and Mrs. Lew Mathe, of Los Angeles. In second place were Barry Crane and Kerri Davis, both of Los Angeles, who had been leading the field going into the final session of play. Had Mathe not made a bold bid (and gotten away with it) against Crane and Miss Davis, the latter would have won the championship. Mathe was sitting in the South seat.

East-West vulnerable. North deals.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
Pass	1 ♣	1 NT	Dbl.
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ♠.

For Mathe's one-notrump overcall, he was supposed to have (according to the "book") 16-18 high-card points (which he had) and a balanced hand containing the requisite protection in each suit. As is evident, he did not fulfill the later two requirements.

West's double was, of course, for penalties. When the bidding reverted to Mathe, he decided to gamble out one-notrump doubled, instead of reteating to the safer contract in two diamonds. His decision, if one judges by results, was the right one.

Crane, in the West seat, got off to the five-of-spades opening lead, and Miss Davis won the trick with her king. She next cashed the ace of spades, after which she returned a spade. Crane now won three more tricks in this suit.

On the last three spade leads, Mathe had to make three discards. He chose the three, five, and jack of clubs. After cashing his fifth spade, Crane led the club queen, Mathe's ace winning. Dummy was then entered via the heart king, and the ten of diamonds was led, South finessing. West won the trick with the king, but, as is evident, he had no club to play back to his partner. So Mathe ended up with seven tricks: two hearts, four diamonds, and one club. Thus he fulfilled his doubled contract, for a score or 23 out of 25 match points.

Had Miss Davis, East, been clairvoyant, she could have defeated the contract by leading a low club at trick two (after having won trick one with the spade king). Whatever Mathe now did, he could not have prevented the defenders from making five spade tricks, one diamond, and one club.

But, on this particular day, Lady Luck was on Mathe's side — West had been dealt only one club instead of two.

Oshawa-Built Car 10% Cheaper in U.S.; Why?

TORONTO (CP) — New car buyers pay about $300 more than buyers in the United States for North American-built cars, even those made in Canada, says a survey published today.

The survey, done in Ontario, shows car dealers are being charged about 10 per cent more than U.S. dealers for cars built in Canada.

The federal government is investigating the pricing policy of automobile manufacturers. Officials of the government's industry, trade and commerce department recently estimated that the gap between new-car prices in Canada and the U.S. widened last year to between eight and nine per cent after six years of gradual reductions to a low of between three and 3.5 per cent in 1970.

To determine the situation this year, The Globe and Mail made a study of pricing policies by the "big four" manufacturers for their best-selling "intermediate model."

Dealers here and in Buffalo, N.Y., were asked to supply precise figures on their own costs as well as the published list prices. They also supplied rough estimates of the price they would charge a price-conscious purchaser who did not have a trade-in.

The cars in question were the Chevelle of General Motors' Chevrolet dealers; Ford's Torino; Chrysler's Plymouth Satellite and American Motors' Matador.

Dealers were asked for pricing details on a hypothetical car with a standard V-8 engine, automatic transmission, power steering and an AM radio.

The dealers' replies indicated a general 10-per-cent differential before state, county and provincial sales taxes and despite the appreciation of the Canadian dollar to the point where it has been worth more than $1 in U.S. funds for nearly two months.

The federal government has asked the four manufacturers for a detailed accounting of the reasons for the price differential but thus far none has been provided.

The survey says a Torino costs a Buffalo dealer $2,457 plus freight of about $50. The same car costs a Toronto dealers $3,024 plus freight.

All Torinos being sold in the Eastern Canada market and a majority sold in upper New York state are built at Ford's plants in Oakville and St. Thomas, Ont.

The survey says all four manufacturers follow similar policies in setting suggested list prices. In each case the suggested mark-ups to dealers are about 25 per cent of the invoiced prices.

However, the survey also showed that dealers here and in Buffalo are selling at well below the list prices. The average mark-up on deals not involving trade-ins was about 12 per cent in both cities.

Thus using the Torino example, the suggested list price in Buffalo is $3,118 but dealers will sell it for $2,800. In Toronto, suggested price is $3,754 with a "deal" price of $3,450.

The survey says if the price to Toronto dealers was the same as now charged to Buffalo dealers, the excise tax would be $295 instead of $324. If the dealer used the same 12-per-cent markup his "deal" price to the consumer would be about $3,150 instead of $3,450 a saving to the consumer of $300.

Oil Talks Set

EDMONTON (CP) — Hearings into Alberta's new oil revenue policy will begin May 23, and last for four days, the legislature, meeting as a committee, decided Wednesday.

The new policy, which will raise between $50 million and $90 million if accepted, would tax crude oil reserves still in the ground.

The committee, meeting under the chairmanship of Don McCrimmon (PC — Ponoka) also laid down the rules of the hearings:

—Intent to submit written submissions must be made no later than 5 p.m., May 10;

—All submissions must be in by May 18. Submissions must be made in 100 copies;

—A "widest possible latitude" will be given to public groups or organizations who wish to present submissions.

The public hearings will gather opinions on the policy to replace the 10-year royalties agreement with oil companies that expired March 31. The government has indicated it will "never again" make such long agreements.

Once the public hearings are concluded the cabinet will decide on the new policy.

No Solution

EDMONTON (CP) — There is nothing the provincial government is going to do that will magically solve the problems of Alberta cities in setting 1972 budgets and mill rates, Dave Russell, municipal affairs minister, said in the legislature Tuesday.

"The only assistance I can think of that any municipality is getting is their increase in the municipal assistance grant and whatever assistance they might get through proposed legislation dealing with the supplementary assessment role."

Cuts Challenged

EDMONTON (CP) — Chamber of Commerce proposals for cuts in school spending would destroy equality in education, says a city educationist.

Len Garrett, director of staffing for the public school board, said Tuesday that the chamber's suggestions for cuts in the board's 1972 budget would create an "elitist" system based on academic achievement, and downgrade special classes for students with problems.

The chamber's brief, made public this week, said about $1 million could be saved through the adoption of hold-the-line policies in all departments and more than $2 million could be saved through such measures as increases in pupil-teacher ratios and dropping low-enrolment classes.

Warrants Quashed

CALGARY (CP) — Warrants used by RCMP to search city firms dealing in cash for unemployment cheques were quashed Tuesday in an Alberta Supreme Court ruling.

The decision by Mr. Justice H. W. Riley included an order to return thousands of documents seized in April 11 raids. The crown, however, obtained a stay of the order in the case of one firm and will appeal the judgment setting aside the warrants.

Drivers Fined

EDMONTON (CP) — Two Edmonton transit system bus drivers have been fined $15 each after pleading guilty to violating the city's anti-noise bylaw.

Checks showed that decibel counts for buses driven by Terry Walton and Harry Lowe were from three to six decibels above the allowed 90-decibel level. The transit system paid the fines and costs for both drivers.

Socred Policy

WINNIPEG (CP) — Social Credit leader Real Caouette said Wednesday the main point in his party's federal election campaign would be the replacement of all welfare programs with a guaranteed annual income.

Speaking at the first news conference of his Western Canada tour, Caouette said existing welfare programs cost Canada $16 billion and "encourage laziness and fraud."

OTTAWA BUDGET SET MAY 8

OTTAWA (UPI) — Finance Minister John Turner announced today he would present a budget on the evening of May 8.

The announcement dispelled persistent rumors that the government was planning a June election, although an election in the summer months remained a remote possibility.

"I expect to present a budget in this house on the evening of May 8," Turner said in answer to a question from Conservative finance critic Marcel Lambert.

The budget will be Turner's first since he took over the finance portfolio in a cabinet shuffle May 28.

During discussions of possible election dates in the past two weeks, Liberal sources had reported that Turner was among those ministers pressing hardest for a June election — which would require dissolving Parliament immediately and would avoid any need for a budget this spring.

The budget was expected to include promised amendments to the government's controversial tax reform legislation. The government admitted when the bill passed Parliament in December that there were deficiencies requiring early correction.

ASTRONAUTS SPLASH DOWN —ALL SAFE

HOUSTON (UPI) — The Apollo 16 astronauts splashed down in the Pacific Ocean today at 2:45 p.m. EST, ending an 11-day, $445 million moon mission they believe will unlock still more secrets of earth's nearest neighbor.

John Young, Thomas Mattingly and Charles Duke splashed down safely, having rescued their $445-million expedition to the lunar highlands from the brink of failure. As it was, they returned a day early.

Surprise Strike Grips Vancouver

Times News Services

VANCOUVER — City operations ground to a halt today as 2,800 civic employees walked off the job in a surprise strike over deadlocked contract negotiations.

The city's 1,000 outside workers voted overwhelmingly at a one-hour meeting this morning to back up a call by union leaders to join the strike action initiated by 1,000 inside workers in an attempt to force a contract settlement.

Police and fire departments were operating normally, but most other city services were shut down, including city hall, welfare offices and maintenance yards.

As news of the strike spread, the city's welfare office was the scene of a spontaneous demonstration by about 400 welfare recipients who milled in front of the building and blocked traffic to bring attention to their own plight.

The Municipal Labor Relations Bureau, which negotiates contract settlements on behalf of Vancouver and six suburban municipalities, scheduled an afternoon meeting to consider the developments.

Ken Derby, spokesman for the striking Municipal and Regional Employees Union (MREA), said the action was being taken because of the city's failure to resume negotiations toward a new contract.

"They've been playing around with us, stalling, putting us off, and they have no real intention of bargaining," he said.

The inside workers walked off the job at 6:30 a.m. and strung picket lines outside city buildings.

Both civic unions staged a 24-hour walkout April 11 to protest what they said was the MLRB's unwillingness to negotiate a new contract to replace one that expired Dec. 31.

Talks broke off last month when the MLRB made what it said was its final offer of a 9.55-per-cent increase in wages and fringe benefits.

The two unions have demanded a 20 per cent increase in a one-year contract.

★ Bennett Offers To Arbitrate

VANCOUVER (CP) — Premier Bennett has offered to settle personally British Columbia's construction industry contract dispute — as a reluctant arbitrator.

Bennett offered his services Wednesday when he returned from a trip to New York shortly after the Construction Labor Relations Association, representing 840 contractors, announced it will lock out 30,000 members of 18 building trades unions at 4:30 p.m. Friday.

"It's not something I would choose to do," the premier said, adding that both sides would have to agree in advance to accept his settlement as binding.

"It would be a difficult job, but it would be my duty if they can't get anybody else," Bennett said.

He said he had talked about the dispute with Labor Minister James Chabot and that the minister is still trying to find an acceptable arbitrator.

In Victoria Chabot said today the government will not act this week or next to end the construction industry lockout.

Following 90-minute cabinet meeting this morning, Chabot said there is no likelihood that the lockout by the Construction Labor Relations Association will be averted.

He also indicated the government is unlikely to tolerate another three-month tie-up like the one that occured during the summer in 1970.

That one was "probably too lengthy," Chabot said in response to a question.

The minister said that the lockout was "perfectly legal" but the cabinet would have to decide, once it begins, "whether it's of public concern" to order the construction industry back to work.

More Bombs —Nixon

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon announced Wednesday night plans to pull another 20,000 United States troops out of South Vietnam by July 1 and said the U.S. will keep on bombing North Vietnam until Hanoi halts its "massive invasion" of the South.

Nixon, in a televised address, appealed for country-wide support for what he termed "this final challenge" to his program to get U.S. troops out of South Vietnam without "surrendering our friends to Communist aggression."

TESTING TIME

Nixon portrayed the Communist offensive in the South as a time of test in which Saigon forces — if they get continued U.S. air and naval help — will foil a desperate Hanoi gamble.

His new two-month withdrawal schedule will cut remaining U.S. forces in South Vietnam to 49,000, which he noted was less than 10 per cent of the 549,000 authorized there when he took office in January, 1969.

Hanoi's "one remaining hope," Nixon said in words aimed at stateside critics, "is to win in the Congress of the United States, and among the

Irish Parade Ban Lifted; Women Get IRA Pledge

KWAME NKRUMAH, former president of Ghana and leader of the African independence movement, died today in Conakry, Guinea, according to Guinean radio reports. Nkrumah, named prime minister when Ghana gained independence from Britain in 1951, became president in 1960, but had to go into exile in Guinea when the army seized power while he was on a trip to Peking in 1966. He had been reported critically ill with cancer in recent days. He was 62.

Times News Services

BELFAST — The British government today lifted Northern Ireland's eight-month ban on organized marches and declared an immediate amnesty for all persons convicted of organizing or participating in them.

A group of Roman Catholic housewives in Londonderry, meanwhile, won from the outlawed Irish Republican Army an agreement to stop using their homes to snipe at British troops.

An announcement from the office of William Whitelaw, secretary of state for Ulster since Britain took over direct rule of the province last month, abolished the ban and declared the amnesty.

SNIPER'S CORNER

Northern Ireland's Protestant-dominated government, suspended by the British takeover, imposed the ban last Aug. 9 and instituted internment without trial of suspected IRA members.

A delegation of 22 women from the Creggan Estate, a Catholic stronghold in Londonderry called at the gunmen's local headquarters and appealed to them not to use their homes as cover.

The housewives all live in Demesne Avenue, overlooking the Bligh's Lane army post, which has come under almost daily attack from IRA guerrillas. One end of the street is known as "sniper's Corner."

One of the women said the IRA told them it would try to avoid the area.

"Believe me, most people in the Creggan Estate want peace," a member of the delegation told reporters.

This was the second time in a month that Catholic women living in "flashpoint" areas have called for a truce. A similar appeal was made by a group of housewives in Belfast's Andersonstown district.

KILL SOLDIER

Rock-throwing youths forced an army truck off the road near Armagh Wednesday night, killing one soldier and badly injuring another, the British Army announced. But people in Armagh denied there was any rock-throwing.

MUSKIE PULLS OUT OF U.S. PRIMARIES

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senator Edmund Muskie, considered almost unbeatable four months ago, withdrew from the remaining democratic presidential primaries today but announced he was still available for the nomination at the convention in July.

Confronted with a series of losing primary contests, the Maine senator released the 136 delegates previously pledged to him, declaring "I want them to know that they should feel free to reassess their commitment."

"I have made the decision to withdraw from active participation in the remaining presidential primaries," Muskie sombrely told a news conference.

"I do so with regret, but I have no choice. I do not have the money to continue."

Brandt's Policy Wins Approval

BONN (CP) — A jubilant Willy Brandt beat back today an opposition attempt in the Western German parliament to oust him as chancellor, scoring a personal victory and safeguarding his peace policy for the time being.

Opposition challengers failed by two votes to win a no-confidence motion in Brandt, in a dramatic vote in the Bundestag, parliament's lower house. The opposition won 247 votes but needed 249 of the 496 members.

Brandt's triumph cleared the way for the ratification vote next week of his non-aggression treaties with Moscow and Warsaw—vital for the whole course of his policy of easing East-West tension.

But Defence Minister Helmut Schmidt, the deputy leader of Brandt's Social Democratic party, said the prospect for ratification of the treaties "is as difficult now as before."

Former chancellor Kurt George Kiesinger led the attack on Brandt in the debate before the vote and based it on opposition to the two treaties, which recognize Germany's territorial losses at the end of the Second World War.

The Christian Democrats contend that the treaties, which are crucial to the improvement of relations between West Germany and the Soviet bloc, give away too much without getting enough in return.

Bennett Approves MD Fees

VANCOUVER (CP) — Premier Bennett announced Wednesday the provincial government will accept a new fee schedule giving doctors a 6.5-per-cent increase on average earnings.

But he said at the same time, the government would turn down any new fee schedule which involved an actual 6.5-per-cent increase on rates.

The premier, who had just returned from a 12-day visit to the United States, also said:

— He was more convinced than ever that U.S.-style wage, price and interest controls should be introduced in Canada;

— The proposed Moran Dam won't be built on the Fraser River as long as he is premier;

— The provincial government will listen to Vancouver council's criticisms of its proposed downtown skyscraper, but will make its own decisions.

NEEDLE FOUND INSIDE HEART

Pravda, the Communist Party newspaper said today that 40-year-old Moroz was recovering after doctors in the Ukraine successfully removed the needle from the left ventricle of his heart. How the needle got there was not explained.

Pravda said only that "the patient remembered that he had been sewing in the evening and, finishing the job, had put the needle on the bed."

Bonner's First Job . . . IWA

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

Robert Bonner today took over the reins as chief executive officer for MacMillan Bloedel and his first step was to meet WA negotiators and urge them to accept arbitration in their wage dispute.

"In every case where there has been a strike, third party intervention has been needed to resolve it," he said in an interview with the Times before entering the meeting.

"There has never been a case of one side or the other backing down once a strike has begun in the forestry industry. If third party intervention is inevitable it only makes sense that we plan for it now so that we can prevent damage to the economy through a disruptive strike."

He expressed the hope that the dispute would be in the hands of an arbitrator before the legal strike date, June 15.

Bonner's rise to the top of the country's largest forestry company caps a remarkable career. He was appointed attorney-general at the age of 31, just four years after he graduated from the University of B.C.

As well as the attorney-general's portfolio he served briefly as education minister (1953-54) and as minister of industrial development, trade and commerce (1957-64).

He was widely regarded as Premier Bennett's right-hand man and heir-apparent but after 16 years as attorney-general he resigned to become senior vice-president of administration for MacMillan Bloedel.

Subsequently he became executive vice-president and then vice-president of the company.

J. V. Clyne, 70, president of MacMillan Bloedel and its predecessor company since 1958, announced his retirement at the end of the company's annual meeting in Vancouver Wednesday. (See story Page 13.)

Bonner's appointment as president took effect when he arrived for work at 8:30 p.m. today and wage negotiations with the IWA were very much on his mind.

He noted that the company's first quarter showing was strong (net income of $9 million compared with $1.4 million in the first quarter last year) but added that the whole year's income must be taken into account. Effective return on investment in 1971 was "only 4.1 per cent, less than could be obtained by investing the money in government bonds.

He was not optimistic about early success in his campaign for a selective free trade area with the United Sates. There was some resistance to the idea in eastern Canada and in the United States.

Inside Richard Nixon: The Struggle of Two Men

By BRUCE MAZLISH

(Mazlish is professor of history at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and author of the forthcoming book, "In Search of Nixon: a Psychohistorical Inquiry." He wrote this analysis of Nixon's character for The Washington Post).

Americans have long been searching for Richard Nixon, for a guiding purpose behind his apparent contradictions, for the man behind the policies.

They are forever perplexed by his sudden turnabouts from cold war warrior to the Peking summit, from free-market economics to the wage-price freeze. Just as they think they have hit him in their sights, Richard Nixon is off again on another spree of ambivalence.

There is, for some reason, a great reluctance to accept the fact that a central characteristic of the man is ambivalence itself. After all, ambivalence — conflicting feelings toward an object or idea, love-hate impulses and the like — is a trait found in most people; what is extraordinary is only the degree to which it is present in the president.

Gladden Freudians

To understand Richard Nixon, then, one must look to the sources of his particular ambivalences, to his childhood and youth, and especially to his parents. There, in a manner to gladden the heart of any Freudian analyst, can be found the origins of an unusually mixed combative and peaceful nature.

Nixon's mother was a Quaker, devoted to peace. His father was a "Bible-pounding" Methodist, temporarily converted to Quakerism at the time of his marriage but, relapsing later, and taking young Richard with him.

Overlooked by almost all commentators is the fact that the day after Richard entered high school, his father took him and his two brothers to Los Angeles to attend the revival meetings conducted by Chicago evangelist Paul Rader. As Mr. Nixon tells it in Billy Graham's magazine, Decision: "We joined hundreds of others that night in making our personal commitments to Christ and Christian service."

The father, Frank Nixon, was also notorious for his temper and irritability. And to complicate matters further, it was the peaceful mother who seemed "strong," and the competitive father who because of his lack of success, especially financial success, seemed "weak." It is little wonder that Richard became unusually ambivalent.

By the time he was 12, Richard had decided to follow the inspiration of his father, who loved to argue and debate. He would become a "lawyer who couldn't be bought."

From this decision, it was only a short step to entering, as Mr. Nixon himself put it, the "warfare of politics." It was a step that greatly saddened his mother, though his volunteering for the navy in the Second World War, contrary to Quaker principles, had already prepared her for the blow and for his future vocation.

The rest of the background is familiar to anyone who has followed Nixon's career to the presidency. The competitive, fighting "Tricky Dicky," enamored of "strength" and "strong men," is a person we know well.

This is the Nixon who speaks with contempt of the weak, self-indulgent students — those "bums" — and contrasts them with the brave soldiers who "stand tall" in Vietnam. This is the Nixon who wants as advisers "people that are strong, people who aren't panicking . . . Somebody who brings serenity, calmness or strength into the room": a John Newton Mitchell, who is "strong," seemingly imperturable, free of doubts, advocating a "get tough" policy: a Spiro Agnew, picked it seems partly because he impressed Nixon at first sight as somebody who was sure of himself, who was without weakness, who's "got it;" and a John Connally, the latest addition to the president's circle of "strong men."

(Though Nixon does not mention it, he appears also to need "weaker" men, such as his friend, Robert Finch, in fact, Nixon's view of his cabinet, with the recent exception of Connally, seems not to allow for "strong" men there. Such balancing of strong and weak corresponds with Nixon's own ambivalence.) In short, this is the Richard Nixon who, desperately afraid that the United States will appear "a pitiful, helpless giant," drops bombs on Vietnam and strikes bold and warlike postures.

Bad Conscience

Less known, however, is the Nixon who has an "obsession" with peace, to use his own word. His identification with his mother in this matter, though not as obvious, is as strong as with his father's pugnacity. My speculation is that it leaves him with a bad conscience about his aggressiveness.

But more to our point here, it also endows him with a sincere dedication to international peace.

Pacifist and Warrior Locked Togetehr

From his entrance into politics as a congressman representing an isolationist district, Nixon surprisingly showed himself an internationalist in orientation. Thus, he worked on the Herter committee, whose report led to the Marshall Plan, and considered this the most important service of his congressional career. In 1940, he supported Wendell Willkie; as he later labeled himself, he was a "whole-worlder."

In the 1940s and '50s, of course, internationalism was connected for many Americans with anti-communism; e.g., the Marshall Plan was to save Western Europe from the communists. It is this fact that has tended to obscure Nixon's sincere commitment to peace. I believe we catch the true flavor of his feelings on the matter in an unusually candid statement he made to Walter Cronkite in 1960:

"Well, my major interest ever since I came to Washington, and long before that, has been in the field of foreign policy and of foreign affairs . . . The reason that, to me, the overriding issue of our times is foreign affairs, is where it comes right out of my whole background. I indicated, for example, that my mother is a Quaker. She is a very good one. I am not as good. But, from the time that I can remember, I know that she and my grandmother, her mother who lived to be 93, used to talk about their 'concern,' which is a Quaker way of expressing it, for building a better life not only for people in this country but for people everywhere. This humanitarian approach to the problems of the world, an approach, incidentally, which they have, my mother and my grandmother, more in their character than I have, but which I certainly have acquired from them to an extent; this is something that I think has affected my whole attitude toward public service generally."

Nixon then concludes, "and, as I see the responsibilities for the next president . . . his major role will be to attempt to make a contribution toward building a world peace, with freedom for all people." I am prepared to believe Nixon when he says he has "an obsession on this point."

At this juncture, other "obsessions" swing into action. For example, a few weeks before the interview with Cronkite, Nixon said, "I think that we can have peace. I think that we can keep our own freedom, and I think that we can win the struggle against slavery and for freedom throughout the world . . ."

Characteristically, we have the usual Nixon division into all good and all bad, slavery and freedom, aggressor and peace-loving one worlder. It is these opposing tendencies in his personality that lead to confusion of thought and often murky speeches difficult for the public to decipher.

Deny His Pugnacity

What compounds the problem at this point, moreover, is Nixon's compelling necessity to deny his aggressive and combative feeling. Standing as we do on the eve of his visit to Moscow in May, we might recall with profit his earlier visit, and his kitchen debate with then Premier Nikita Khrushchev.

Nixon's version of the discussion is given in his book, Six Crises. Khrushchev, he tells us, "does not need to be convinced of our good intentions. He knows we are not aggressors and do not threaten the security of the Soviet Union." Again, "it was my belief that Khrushchev knew that our intentions were peaceful."

The fact that the Russians might remember the American intervention in the Russian civil war, the American willingness, in part, to have Germany invade Russia, and other matters was all written off by Nixon as merely an "act" on Khrushchev's part. In this denial of his own aggressive intent, and this refusal to recognize his opponent's real fears, Nixon seems at one with much of America's recent self-image.

Such a statement must be placed in the context of Nixon's parental models: the mother who did not wish him to enter the "warfare of politics," and the father with "his fierce competitive drive."

Is it any wonder that Richard Nixon has a problem making a decision to fight, to release his competitive drive, and that he feels a letdown, as his account of his crises informs us, after the semi-forbidden impulses have been unleashed?

But having indicated Nixon's ambivalence in this matter, we must note that he did, indeed, gain strength from his difficulties. Like his Russian foes, he learned to "steel" himself, and to reject the softer, debilitating, and feminine impulses that threaten him so fearfully — for the simple reason that they are so strongly contained within him. Out of "weakness," then, Nixon can be said to have drawn "strength."

Is such personal "strength," however good for the cause of peace? Nixon, we must remember, like so many of his generation, is a cold war warrior. Cognitively, he remembers that appeasement led to the Second World War.

As he recalls telling the protesting students in his predawn visit to the Lincoln Memorial after Kent State, "I know it is awfully hard to keep this in perspective. I told them that in 1938 I thought Neville Chamberlain was the greatest man living and Winston Churchill was a madman. It was not until years later that I realized Neville Chamberlain was a good man but Winston Churchill was right."

The cognitive knowledge fits perfectly with Nixon's personal feelings about being strong. As he told Cronkite, "I think the way . . . to have peace is to be strong and be prepared to resist those who threaten peace." It also fits with his fierce conviction about competitiveness: peace is something that must be "won."

For Richard Nixon the great danger is that he and America will appear impotent, will go "soft," will allow themselves to be "humiliated."

Thus peace for Nixon can only be won by a kind of "warfare". He and the United States must show itself strong. Since peace, however, is generally secured through realistic compromise, at least where military victory is absent, the compulsive need to appear strong can often hamper meaningful negotiations.

Needs an Enemy

China, at least at the moment, appears to allow Nixon a balance between his ambivalences, and thus a chance to assert the pragmatic considerations of power politics along with his peaceful desires.

The combative side of Nixon, however, with its constant need for an enemy on whom to load his negative feelings, has figured unduly in his attitudes toward India and Bangladesh, "tilting" him against them.

Will he also require the Soviet Union as such an opponent? Only time, and the results of the Moscow trip in May, will help us to answer this question.

THE LAST POST

Some of the more important issues on which last October's Newfoundland election campaign was fought were absent from the province's second campaign in five months. One of these was Joey Smallwood, now without a House of Assembly seat for the first time since 1949. Another was the government's option to buy the giant Bowaters paper mill in Corner Brook.

New premier Frank Moores cancelled the option and the studies which had been ordered to test the feasibility of a government takeover of the plant soon after taking office in January, and dismissed the plan as nothing more than a "political gimmick." He said a PC government "would not go in and disrupt reputable companies with world-wide respected reputations."

Thus ended a controversy that had lasted since August, when Bowaters officials informed the provincial government that they were planning to close down their 100,000-ton-a-year Number Seven mill in November, putting 350 mill employees and about 800 loggers out of work.

Security Lost

The announcement shook Corner Brook, Newfoundland's second city, to its roots. For many workers and families, it meant that the security they had known since Bowaters — the city's only industrial employer — had first moved there in the twenties was gone.

Hit only slightly less hard was then premier Smallwood, about to face a tough battle for re-election. Meeting company and public officials in Corner Brook the next day, he lashed out at the multinational Bowater empire for favouring its other mills over its Newfoundland operation.

"I suspect that this mill is paying toll, tribute, cash to the international Bowaters Corporation," he said. He asked for, and later received, a three-month option from the company to purchase their Newfoundland assets, valued at near $100 million.

Many shared Smallwood's suspicions that the Corner Brook mill was not keeping up with technological change, that Bowaters were giving priority to the other mills in the United States to supply the North American market, and that they were generally neglecting the Corner Brook operation. Paper makers charged that the company failed to keep up with changing technology, and that the Number Seven machine was obsolete from the day it was bought.

'Be Sensible'

Both party leaders realized the seriousness of the Corner Brook situation, at least in political and election terms. Moores called on the Liberals to "end this approach (the proposed takeover) and handle Newfoundland's problems in a sensible way."

On October 2, a meeting between provincial cabinet ministers and Bowater brass solidified the deal. A nine-month option to purchase the Bowater assets was given the provincial government for $200,000 (with 75 per cent of that returning to the government if and when the purchase is made).

"We will not allow it to fold," said Smallwood during the crisis, echoing Newfoundlanders' fear of 'losing' industry at any cost. "We intend to keep it going if it is the last thing we do."

But nationalize? Not quite. The mill would be bought by the government and run by a crown croporation. But, said the premier, "I don't think that a crown corporation would operate the mill indefinitely. It might be wise to wait for markets to improve, as they will, before turning it back to private enterprise."

What was termed 'nationalization' of the Bowater property was nothing more than a promised temporary takeover in the heat of an election. The government bails out the failing industry when the profits are sinking, re-establishes it, and then hands it back to the capitalist to let him start making his profits again.

They Were Naive

The reaction to the takeover by labor leaders, journalists and politicians was twofold. On the one hand they were rightly suspicious of Smallwood's motives in the matter. On the other, they were naive toward their economic benefactor.

"The announcement (of the proposed takeover) . . . raises many fears as it's always questionable whether the government can run industry as efficiently as private enterprise," wrote the head of the local pulp and paper union. His questioning was echoed by editorials in the largest provincial daily newspapers.

Bowaters was exonerated, the government solution itself was the target for the criticism. Perhaps it was because of the people's old attitude of fearing to bite the hand of the industry that meagrely feeds them.

The Bowater operation began in 1925, nineteen years after the first Newfoundland mill at Grand Falls started production. Bowaters had to be bailed out of bankruptcy in the thirties.

"The concessions granted the two companies were unique in North America," writes Richard Gwyn in his book on Smallwood. They paid no stumpage fees on company-owned land, undertook no conservation or reforestation, and paid virtually no taxes to the provincial government."

Instead of taxes, Bowaters paid the province $150,000 a year. By contrast, in the first year after Newfoundland entered Confederation, the company paid $3.5 million in Canadian corporation tax to the federal government.

The Bowater operation in Newfoundland is worth $100 million; it owns the Bowater power company and has timber rights to 11,000 square miles of Newfoundland — more than one quarter of the island.

28,000 Employees

Bowaters Newfoundland is part of a huge international England - based empire established in a dozen countries, employing more than 28,000 people, and with its own fleet of ships. Its assets are in the neighborhood of half a billion dollars. Its North American empire, started at Corner Brook, accounts for half those assets, including the largest newsprint mill in the United States, in Tennessee, opened in 1954 and producing 430,000 tons of newsprint a year.

Bowaters closed its machine on December 31, putting 350 men out of work. Though an upswing in markets this year is being predicted by the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association in its report released in January, Bowaters Newfoundland has no plans to restart and rehire.

By AB KENT
Times Staff

A powerhouse of new help has been authorized for Saanich police department at the nominal cost of $2,700.

Later this year, following departmental estimates approval by municipal council, the police force will be using television, by means of a video tape recording system as a training aid, a tool to wield in crime investigation or to help with law enforcement.

Chief Bob Peterson said the department sees "a multi-use role" for the equipment which elsewhere has been applied to a variety of uses from photo-taping impaired drivers to recording education material for school patrols.

Peterson said video-taping impaired driving subjects is done in the U.S. and there could be a similar use here in the future.

Saanich will be the first municipal force on Vancouver Island to obtain video equipment, although RCMP have four such devices in use throughout their B.C. division and Vancouver city police have it.

Each kit consists of a lightweight portable camera, recording equipment, monitor set, power pack and 12 reels of reusable magnetic tape, each capable of recording for 30 minutes.

The RCMP's training staff has found video recording an aid to self-teaching, for example in family crisis prevention training. Candidates get a better appreciation of the proper techniques by watching themselves handle a set-up situation via instant replay.

For about two years the RCMP have used video directly in police work, for presenting in evidence the layout and conditions at the scene of a sudden death for a coroner's inquest and similar situations.

But the force has yet to try to have the method accepted by a magistrate's court.

In surveillance, building security, monitoring jail cells, crowd control and possibly for collecting evidence remotely — an area open to some interpretation by the courts — the video recording system has potential for police.

"It is an accepted tool in industry and police have to accept it the same way. It is a timesaving tool," a police spokesman said.

Video "has been the topic of cheaper substitute for conventional movie film, can be used any number of times without impairing quality and eventually may be erased to be used for a new purpose. Unlike photographic film, vidoe tape can be played back on the spot.

Vidoe "has been the topic of discussion by most police departments in British Columbia, and I would hazard a guess by all departments across Canada, because of the changes in society and criticisms being made," Peterson said.

Frampton Saw It Coming

Victoria Ald. Percy Frampton said today an attempt to unseat him as acting mayor, slated for today's council meeting, was motivated by Mayor Peter Pollen's concern that "I don't follow along on his path."

Although he had been expecting some such move, Frampton said he was annoyed at the manner in which it had been handled without his being consulted.

The matter was to come before council today in the form of a motion on Pollen's recommendation that four aldermen — Clyde Savage, Tom Christie, Harold Olafson and Ove Witt — should serve as acting mayor for two months each.

If successful, the move would end Frampton's "permanent" role as acting mayor after only four months.

The policy was established by Pollen when he started his term in January. Previously, aldermen held the position on a rotating basis.

Pollen declined today to comment on the reasons for his action, but said in keeping with his policy he had not "lobbied" other aldermen on the matter.

By noon today no alderman had moved or seconded the motion, although Framptor said he had "no doubt" this would happen.

If no mover or seconder emerges, the motion will not be debatable.

Frampton said he believes the action has come about because of his opposition to Pollen's anti-highrise policy.

Saanich Taxes Increase

Saanich property taxes set Wednesday night are up an average 1.86 mills over 1971.

Council became the first in Greater Victoria to set its 1972 general and debt mill rate, ending three consecutive night sittings.

The general and debt mill rate increase over last year is 2.5 mills, an amount reduced proportionately by the fact that school rates this year are lower.

In 10 hours' total consideration this week the members of council trimmed about $630,000 from 1972 budget estimates to produce a mill rate of 42.75 for debt and general purposes.

About 3.58 mills was thinned out of estimates that originally totalled $6.89 million and would have meant a tax increase of 6.69 mills for debt and general purposes.

School tax rates set previously in districts 61 and 63, in which Saanich lies, will bring the net increase in district 61 to 1.585 mills and in district 63 to 2.135 mills.

In addition, there will be increases for properties within the sewer enterprise area, mostly covered by school district 61, totalling an estimated $30.

Mayor Hugh Curtis expressed surprise and pleasure that so much work had been achieved in a relatively short time and that aldermen had done the job in good humor and without acrimony.

Most of the reductions in spending estimates were made Wednesday, just over $500,000, the balance spread between Monday and Tuesday nights.

Toward the end of the exercise in economy the indicated increase in mill rate was still about .62 higher than council was prepared to accept.

Ald. Alan Newberry said he was not ready to approve a rate hike of more than three mills and that he favored something in the area of 2.5 mills.

Surplus Fund Used

Despite a caution from administrator John Tribe against setting a precedent, Mayor Curtis supported the idea of taking from the accumulated surplus account enough funds to reduce the mill rate increase from 3.12 at that point to 2.5. The motion carried unanimously.

The surplus account, which last year received $279,000, stood at $1.252 million at Dec. 31, Tribe told council.

Ald. Newberry observed that the 2.5 mill increase this year is about equal to 6.5 per cent (actually 6.2 per cent), a senior government guideline on wage and price hikes.

Ald. William Noel said that on a $30,000 home the increase in taxation would work out to about $21.75.

Comptroller-treasurer Roy Broughton worked out illustrations of the new tax rate using a 1971 net taxable assessment of $7,200, indicating a property with market value around $28,000.

Last year the tax on this property, including the school rate but not counting local improvement levies, would be around $523 in School District 61.

Assessments were up in a majority of cases this year, and using 5 per cent increment, the same property as described would have a net taxable assessment of about $7,500.

In the Saanich portion of School District 61 the net increase in taxation on this property will be $34 for a total $557 in tax.

Art Gallery Given Grant For Exhibit

A $14,000 Canada Council grant has been awarded to the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria to publish a catalogue of its Japanese art collection.

Curator Colin Graham said the collection has international status and will be exhibited in December at the Royal Ontario Museum in Toronto and later at the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts.

"For months we have had scholars from the Royal Ontario Museum and the Centre for Asian Arts in Seattle preparing the text for the catalogue," he said. "We have had as many as six scholars at one time at the gallery."

Graham said the catalogue will not only be used for the Toronto and Montreal Exhibition but as a handbook for the collection. It will have a hard cover and color reproductions of some of the art pieces.

He said the Royal Ontario Museum also plans an exhibit in Victoria next spring of its famous Chinese Art collection.

Jet Age Arrives Like It or Not

Sidney residents are now prepared to accept — grudgingly — the inevitability of regular jet traffic over their area.

But there is one elderly woman, who was once a vociferous opponent of the lengthening of the main runway at Victoria International Airport, who says she has come to love the advent of the jet age, which has occurred right over her rooftop.

The woman, who declined to let her name be used, today described stretched DC8 jets as "great big huge birds coming in over my head soft as a cloud."

She said after the runway was lengthened two years ago "nothing outrageous happened as everybody said it would" and now as she sits in her backyard she thrills to the sight of good flying.

Many Sidney residents are not quite so enchanted by the sound of a jet, but the protests have died down as Air Canada starts regularly scheduled jet flights out of here (see Page 6).

The complaints have ceased because Sidney council recently proposed to put development restrictions on the residential area most affected by noise pollution, explained Mrs. Norma Sealey, who last year as an alderman for the town conducted a study into the problem.

But council dropped rezoning plans when it was "severely reprimanded" by the same people who were complaining.

Mrs. Sealey said they feared that with restricted zoning their property values would drop. "Everybody (near the flight paths) is anxious to unload their property on somebody else."

Ald. Wilkie Gardner of Sidney said residents are prepared to accept regular jet traffic but they are against the commercial jet training flights that zoom around the area.

He said as soon as these jets hit the shoreline at Sidney they rev up their engines and bank away, which creates black smoke and "a violent reaction on the ground."

The noise doesn't seem as bad when jets actually take off and land, and residents have come to realize that "there is nothing they can do about it anyhow."

As a matter of fact, he said, to many people there is "nothing more exciting than planes coming down. It's all a part of the circus."

He added that the elderly woman who now gladly lives under the main flight path is so well-known by pilots that some dip their wings in salute to her as they pass over.

Pollen to London

Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen will be among a party of 17 Canadian mayors visiting the City of London next month as guests of the Lord Mayor, Sir Edward Howard.

The official visit is from May 10 to 13, but Pollen said today he will remain in London until the 16th.

Pollen will be accompanied by his wife. Among their fellow travellers will be Vancouver Mayor Tom Campbell and his wife.

The program includes extensive sightseeing around the city, a visit to the Royal Opera House and dinner at Mansion House — for which Pollen has been asked to bring along his chain of office.

Tugs Help Commuters

That's the view of a man well qualified to assess the situation — bridge operator John Kirkendale, who has been on the job for 26 years.

In the two months since the B.C. Towboat Owners Association asked its members to refrain from using the bridge during certain hours except in cases of emergency, Kirkendale says he has noticed "a big improvement" in the situation.

The tugboat operators, he said Wednesday, appear to be trying to ensure that the bridge isn't raised for their vessels between the peak hours of 7:30 and 8:30 a.m., and 4:30 and 5:30 p.m.

Kirkendale said in some instances this co-operation has extended to the tugs "waiting around" in the Inner Harbor or on the seaward side of the bridge, until road traffic flows have eased.

"I see them there but I don't raise the bridge until they call me up on the radio-telephone," he said.

Entries in the log kept in the bridge operator's shed show that marine use of the bridge during busy hours this week has been minimal.

Out of a total of 20 lifts Monday, only three were at peak hours — 8:25 a.m., 9:05 a.m. and 5:35 p.m.

On Tuesday there were 19 lifts. Seaspan's tug Trojan went out at 7:25 a.m., returned at 8:44 a.m. and went out again at 5:30 p.m.

Only real offender Wednesday was the train-car carrier Grey York, which opened the bridge at 7:50 a.m.

City hall has not yet analysed the bridge log entries of recent weeks, but an official said Wednesday there seems to be all-round improvement in traffic interruption.

Early in February city council asked the transport department in Ottawa for authority to restrict raising of the bridge between 7 and 9 a.m., and from 4 to 6 p.m.

No response came from Ottawa, but meanwhile the B.C. Towboat Owners Association asked members to observe the two daily two-hour restrictions, to head off attempts at enforced closure for double that period.

CONSIDER, IF YOU WILL, this hypothetical case.

A merchant ship runs into desperate trouble off our shores. The Canadian Coast Guard rescues her people, but the stricken freighter is past saving.

Bunker oil from her gashed tanks forms a rapidly spreading slick. She carries several hundred tons of fuel — enough if it drifts inshore to turn beaches black and play the very devil with resident and migratory waterfowl.

Our Department of Transport, with an assist from National Defence, gets busy. Containing booms are rigged, and oil-gathering equipment rushed to the area.

Naturally, all this costs. The bill may run into hundreds of thousands of dollars. In the case of a major oil spill, it could go much higher. The question that then arises is, who's going to pay?

If the ship carries and maintains a seaworthiness certificate issued by Lloyds Register or one of a few other strictly governed regulatory bodies, answers can be arrived at. A master mariner who feels strongly that Canada should amend her maritime laws explains it this way, taking Lloyds as his example:

"A rigid system ensures that the certificate is kept current through inspections.

If the certificate lapses so does the insurance, effectively crippling the operation of that ship."

He adds that most first class shipping, regardless of flag, operates under Lloyds survey or the equivalent.

Let us suppose, though, that the cargo carrier of our hypothesis is not a first-class ship.

The fact that she sailed under "a flag of convenience" — Liberian or Panamanian, perhaps — doesn't necessarily mean that she lacks valid certification. But under an obligingly tolerant government, it very well may, and in this instance, it does.

To Lloyds or its equivalent body, she is a dimming memory. Her seaworthiness certificate is long lapsed. The spoor of her actual owners leads through the front door of a dummy company and out the back.

Suspicion may point to a multi-corporation or to a one-ship operator who has gambled his bucket of bolts against the sea's hazards. But suspicion is not proof, and proof may be much harder to find than a good deed in a naughty world.

So, once more quoting our irked master mariner, the question of who pays could lead to this ultimate answer:

"Good old Joe, the Canadian taxpayer. And I think we should be doing more to ensure that he doesn't wind up getting stuck with the bill."

His solution?

Not to establish and man control centres which would shepherd ships to our ports from 200 miles offshore at enormous cost to Canada.

And not to attempt regulations which could be invoked only when or if some oil-spewing cripple has limped or been assisted into a Canadian harbor. By that time, the damage has been done.

"What we should have for our own protection," he says, "is a law with teeth that would head off trouble at the source.

"No ship which cannot produce a current seaworthiness certificate or its equivalent should be allowed into Canadian waters. Possession of such a certificate is our guarantee that a ship is structurally sound, and that it has properly certified officers, equipment and crew.

"We should also insist on proof of liability from the owners to be furnished before any ship sails for a Canadian port."

To those strong words, this veteran seafarer added a disturbing thought.

The tremendous oil carriers that all too soon may be travelling a charted route off our British Columbia coast will be first class ships, certified to a fare-ye-well and efficiently manned. They will be as accident-proof as any ship that plies great waters can be. Although there's little comfort in the fact, Canada will know who to bill, or sue if necessary, in the event of oil damage.

We should be worrying less about oil trouble from that source, he suggests, and much more about ill-found vessels that come and go scarce-noticed while oil routes are debated.

Family Allowance Bill's NDP Critics

OTTAWA (CP) — Exasperated by extended Commons debate on his bill to transform the family allowance system, Welfare Minister John Munro tore into New Democratic Party MPs Wednesday for opposing it.

He told the Commons the NDP appears to have made a cynical decision to appeal for votes among the top 25 per cent of income earners, abandoning its commitment to the poor in the process.

He also said that the way to fight poverty effectively in Canada without driving people to welfare is to combine a selective family allowances plan with increased minimum wages.

The bill would throw out the current baby bonus plan, which makes payments to all families with children, and replace it with a scheme that would give more money to fewer people — primarily those families with annual incomes below $7,000.

NDP members—with some Social Credit and Conservative support—have been rising one by one to denounce the bill, mainly on the argument that it would categorize and stigmatize lower-income Canadians by giving them benefits those with higher incomes wouldn't receive.

Debate on second reading—preliminary to sending bills to committee for detailed scrutiny — has dragged on for eight days and still doesn't appear to be near an end.

MAKES CONCESSION

Mr. Munro made one concession to the Conservatives Wednesday.

Gordon Fairweather (PC—Fundy Royal) asked whether he would make alterations to a clause that now would limit benefits to children in foster homes and institutions to half the regular rate.

The minister said the reasoning behind the clause was that the federal government already pays half the costs for institutionalizing or keeping children in foster homes.

But he said he was perfectly willing "to look at this again in committee to see if some better formula cannot be worked out."

The NDP proposal to make family allowance benefits universal would cost at least $700 million, he said, which couldn't be recovered in taxes even if every benefit paid to families earning $10,000 or more a year was taxed back at 100 per cent.

The New Democrats, who originally said they would approve the bill at second reading, had "decided cynically that perhaps it could appeal to the middle-income voter and obtain some political gain at the expense of the poor of Canada."

They had belittled themselves and the principles for which they stood in an attempt to turn middle-income earners, many of whom will lose all claim to family allowances, against the poor.

SOME SUPPORT PLAN

But while some middle-income earners rather resented losing the allowances, said Mr. Munro, many had told him that they were prepared to take the loss to assist people in poorer circumstances.

Mr. Munro said that "once we bring in legislation of this kind we can realistically raise our minimum wage levels and perhaps make a joint, effective attack on poverty."

There were few incentives now for people with children to work for minimum wages, he said, because going on welfare at least meant the size of the family would be taken into account.

The federal minimum wage is $1.75 an hour and no province has a rate any higher.

But if family allowance benefits were increased for the poor and the minimum wages were raised as well, there would be incentives to work.

People who had to be on welfare would not suffer from the new benefit scheme, he said, although provinces could conceivably cut welfare payments by the amount of the increase in family allowances.

"I would think that any province which would adopt such a policy of avarice, such a harsh policy in terms of low-income groups, would be repudiated by provincial electors."

Universal family allowance now provides monthly payments of $6 for each child under 10, $8 for those between 10 and 15, and $10 for youths between 16 and 18 who are in school.

WILL DOUBLE BENEFITS

Mr. Munro said it would approximately double benefits for most of the 1,249,000 families in lower-income brackets who would receive maximum benefits, and over-all about 75 per cent of families would not lose out under the new plan.

Stanley Knowles, NDP House Leader, returned to the fray by saying that allowance recipients would wear "the badge of poverty" — they would have to "parade, declare and assert their poverty."

In the 1930s elderly people had been ashamed to apply for pensions because there was a means test. When it had been removed a whole new way of life had been opened to them.

The NDP, said Mr. Knowles, wanted even larger payments for poor people, but couldn't accept the strings the government had attached, which amounted to a means test.

FISHING BAN 'BOON'

TORONTO (CP) The federal government's ban on commercial fishing for Atlantic salmon in New Brunswick is a godsend for the fishermen, Environment Minister Jack Davis said Wednesday.

Mr. Davis said reduced catches have been whittling away their livelihood and they will be better off under the government's compensation plan. The compensation budget exceeds the $3 million annual income from fishing, he said.

Asked if it was fair to continue sport fishing for salmon, Mr. Davis said anglers take only three per cent of the salmon caught and that this is not a significant factor in the current reduction of the fish population.

Mr. Davis said loud objections from fishermen would disappear when they learn the details of the compensation plan.

WIVES CAN TAKE BEATING —LEGALLY

JOHANNESBURG (Reuter) — A South African husband may legally give his wife a beating, a university deputy vice-chancellor here says.

Prof. Ellison Khan of the University of Witwatersrand told a women's liberation meeting Tuesday night that the law permits a husband "moderate physical chastisement" of his wife.

Khan noted South Africa has only two women members of Parliament and never has produced even a female deputy minister. Moreover there is only one woman judge, he added.

New WCB Accident Prevention Regulations Effective May 1

Accident Prevention Regulations Handbook available to British Columbia workers.

This is an era of rapid change in industry. New technology introduces new machinery and new methods, and with them, new hazards.

The Workmen's Compensation Board is constantly reviewing the accident prevention regulations to make sure they are up-to-date.

A joint WCB-labour-management committee has completed another review which was followed by public hearings. The result is the publishing of this 298 page handbook containing revised and new accident prevention regulations. These regulations apply more realistically to present day work practices and will be of great benefit in hazard control.

The new handbook of regulations has been mailed to all employers. Copies of the handbook are available to workmen without charge from your local WCB office, your employer, or by sending in the coupon below.

I encourage workers in British Columbia to obtain a copy of these regulations by contacting us or your employer."

OTTAWA BUDGET ON MAY 8

OTTAWA (UPI) — Finance Minister John Turner announced today he would present a budget on the evening of May 8.

The announcement dispelled persistent rumors that the government was planning a June election, although an election in the summer months remained a remote possibility.

"I expect to present a budget in this house on the evening of May 8," Turner said in answer to a question from Conservative finance critic Marcel Lambert.

The budget will be Turner's first since he took over the finance portfolio in a cabinet shuffle May 28.

During discussions of possible election dates in the past two weeks, Liberal sources had reported that Turner was among those ministers pressing hardest for a June election — which would require dissolving Parliament immediately and would avoid any need for a budget this spring.

The budget was expected to include promised amendments to the government's controversial tax reform legislation. The government admitted when the bill passed Parliament in December that there were deficiencies requiring early correction.

ASTRONAUTS SPLASH DOWN —ALL SAFE

HOUSTON (UPI) — The Apollo 16 astronauts splashed down in the Pacific Ocean today at 2:45 p.m. EST, ending an 11-day, $445 million moon mission they believe will unlock still more secrets of earth's nearest neighbor.

John Young, Thomas Mattingly and Charles Duke splashed down safely, having rescued their $445-million expedition to the lunar highlands from the brink of failure. As it was, they returned a day early.

Surprise Strike Hits Vancouver

Times News Services

VANCOUVER — City operations ground to a halt today as 2,800 civic employees walked off the job in a surprise strike over deadlocked contract negotiations.

The city's 1,000 outside workers voted overwhelmingly at a one-hour meeting this morning to back up a call by union leaders to join the strike action initiated by 1,000 inside workers in an attempt to force a contract settlement.

Police and fire departments were operating normally, but most other city services were shut down, including city hall, welfare offices and maintenance yards.

As news of the strike spread, the city's welfare office was the scene of a spontaneous demonstration by about 400 welfare recipients who milled in front of the building and blocked traffic to bring attention to their own plight.

The Municipal Labor Relations Bureau, which negotiates contract settlements on behalf of Vancouver and six suburban municipalities, scheduled an afternoon meeting to consider the developments.

Ken Derby, spokesman for the striking Municipal and Regional Employees Union, said the action was being taken because of the city's failure to resume negotiations toward a new contract.

"They've been playing around with us, stalling, putting us off, and they have no real intention of bargaining," he said.

The inside workers walked off the job at 6:30 a.m. and strung picket lines outside city buildings.

Both civic unions staged a 24-hour walkout April 11 to protest what they said was the MLRB's unwillingness to negotiate a new contract to replace one that expired Dec. 31.

Talks broke off last month when the MLRB made what it said was its final offer of a 9.55-per-cent increase in wages and fringe benefits.

Bennett Offers To Arbitrate

VANCOUVER (CP) — Premier Bennett has offered to settle personally British Columbia's construction industry contract dispute — as a reluctant arbitrator.

Bennett offered his services Wednesday when he returned from a trip to New York shortly after the Construction Labor Relations Association, representing 840 contractors, announced it will lock out 30,000 members of 18 building trades unions at 4:30 p.m. Friday.

"It's not something I would choose to do," the premier said, adding that both sides would have to agree in advance to accept his settlement as binding.

"It would be a difficult job, but it would be my duty if they can't get anybody else," Bennett said.

He said he had talked about the dispute with Labor Minister James Chabot and that the minister is still trying to find an acceptable arbitrator.

In Victoria Chabot said today the government will not act this week or next to end the construction industry lockout.

Following 90-minute cabinet meeting this morning, Chabot said there is no likelihood that the lockout by the Construction Labor Relations Association will be averted.

He also indicated the government is unlikely to tolerate another three-month tie-up like the one that occured during the summer in 1970.

The minister said that the lockout was "perfectly legal" but the cabinet would have to decide, once it begins, "whether it's of public concern" to order the construction industry back to work.

More Bombs —Nixon

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon announced Wednesday night plans to pull another 20,000 United States troops out of South Vietnam by July 1 and said the U.S. will keep on bombing North Vietnam until Hanoi halts its "massive invasion" of the South.

Nixon, in a televised address, appealed for country-wide support for what he termed "this final challenge" to his program to get U.S. troops out of South Vietnam without "surrendering our friends to Communist aggression."

TESTING TIME

Nixon portrayed the Communist offensive in the South as a time of test in which Saigon forces — if they get continued U.S. air and naval help — will foil a desperate Hanoi gamble.

His new two-month withdrawal schedule will cut remaining U.S. forces in South Vietnam to 49,000, which he noted was less than 10 per cent of the 549,000 authorized there when he took office in January, 1969.

Hanoi's "one remaining hope," Nixon said in words aimed at stateside critics, "is to win in the Congress of the United States, and among the

Bernadette Is Pardoned As U.K. Lifts March Ban

KWAME NKRUMAH, former president of Ghana and leader of the African independence movement, died today in Conakry, Guinea, according to Guinean radio reports. Nkrumah, named prime minister when Ghana gained independence from Britain in 1951, became president in 1960, but had to go into exile in Guinea when the army seized power while he was on a trip to Peking in 1966. He had been reported critically ill with cancer in recent days. He was 62.

BELFAST — The British government today lifted Northern Ireland's eight-month ban on organized marches and declared an immediate amnesty for all persons convicted of organizing or participating in them.

Among those affected by the amnesty were Catholic civil rights leaders Bernadette Devlin and Frank McManus, both members of parliament who received six-month suspended sentences for participating in illegal marches.

An announcement from the office of William Whitelaw, secretary of state for Ulster since Britain took over direct rule of the province last month, abolished the ban and declared the amnesty.

SNIPER'S CORNER

Northern Ireland's Protestant-dominated government, suspended by the British takeover, imposed the ban last Aug. 9 and instituted internment without trial of suspected IRA members.

A delegation of 22 women from the Creggan Estate, a Catholic stronghold in Londonderry, called at the gunmen's local headquarters and appealed to them not to use their homes as cover.

The housewives all live in Demesne Avenue, overlooking the Bligh's Lane army post, which has come under almost daily attack from IRA guerrillas. One end of the street is known as "sniper's Corner."

One of the women said the IRA told them it would try to avoid the area.

"Believe me, most people in the Creggan Estate want peace," a member of the delegation told reporters.

This was the second time in a month that Catholic women living in "flashpoint" areas have called for a truce. A similar appeal was made by a group of housewives in Belfast's Andersonstown district.

MUSKIE PULLS OUT OF U.S. PRIMARIES

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senator Edmund Muskie, considered almost unbeatable four months ago, withdrew from the remaining democratic presidential primaries today but announced he was still available for the nomination at the convention in July.

Confronted with a series of losing primary contests, the Maine senator released the 136 delegates previously pledged to him, declaring "I want them to know that they should feel free to reassess their commitment."

"I have made the decision to withdraw from active participation in the remaining presidential primaries," Muskie sombrely told a news conference.

"I do so with regret, but I have no choice. I do not have the money to continue."

Brandt's Policy Wins Approval

BONN (CP) — A jubilant Willy Brandt beat back today an opposition attempt in the Western German parliament to oust him as chancellor, scoring a personal victory and safeguarding his peace policy for the time being.

Opposition challengers failed by two votes to win a no-confidence motion in Brandt, in a dramatic vote in the Bundestag, parliament's lower house. The opposition won 247 votes but needed 249 of the 496 members.

Brandt's triumph cleared the way for the ratification vote next week of his non-aggression treaties with Moscow and Warsaw—vital for the whole course of his policy of easing East-West tension.

But Defence Minister Helmut Schmidt, the deputy leader of Brandt's Social Democratic party, said the prospect for ratification of the treaties "is as difficult now as before."

Former chancellor Kurt George Kiesinger led the attack on Brandt in the debate before the vote and based it on opposition to the two treaties, which recognize Germany's territorial losses at the end of the Second World War.

The Christian Democrats contend that the treaties, which are crucial to the improvement of relations between West Germany and the Soviet bloc, give away too much without getting enough in return.

Church of Canada

TORONTO (CP) — Church of Canada was chosen today by the general commission on church union as the name for the new church that will replace the United Church of Canada, the Anglican Church of Canada and the Christian Church Disciples of Christ if organic union is approved.

More Red Ink

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. balance of trade suffered another deficit again in March, sending this year's red ink in its trade accounts well over $1 billion despite Nixon administration efforts to reduce it.

Train Derailed

YALE (CP) — Eight cars of a 76-car Canadian Pacific Railway freight train were derailed early today near this community in the Fraser Canyon. A CP Rail spokesman said there were no injuries and cause of the derailment was not known.

Female Admiral

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Alene Bertha Duerk, 52, was named today the first woman admiral in U.S. history. Adm. Duerk, of Holgate, Ohio, is head of the U.S. Navy Nurse Corps. She was among 50 captains nominated by President Nixon today for promotion to rear admiral.

Bennett Approves MD Fees

VANCOUVER (CP) — Premier Bennett announced Wednesday the provincial government will accept a new fee schedule giving doctors a 6.5-per-cent increase on average earnings.

But he said at the same time the government would turn down any new fee schedule which involved an actual 6.5-per-cent increase on rates.

The premier, who had just returned from a 12-day visit to the United States, also said:

— He was more convinced than ever that U.S.-style wage, price and interest controls should be introduced in Canada;

— The proposed Moran Dam won't be built on the Fraser River as long as he is premier;

— The provincial government will listen to Vancouver council's criticisms of its proposed downtown skyscraper, but will make its own decisions.

NEEDLE FOUND INSIDE HEART

Pravda, the Communist Party newspaper said today that 40-year-old Moroz was recovering after doctors in the Ukraine successfully removed the needle from the left ventricle of his heart. How the needle got there was not explained.

Pravda said only that "the patient remembered that he had been sewing in the evening and, finishing the job, had put the needle on the bed."

Bonner's First Task . . . IWA

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

Robert Bonner today took over the reins as chief executive officer for MacMillan Bloedel and his first step was to meet IWA negotiators and urge them to accept arbitration in their wage dispute.

"In every case where there has been a strike, third party intervention has been needed to resolve it," he said in an interview with the Times before entering the meeting.

"There has never been a case of one side or the other backing down once a strike has begun in the forestry industry. If third party intervention is inevitable it only makes sense that we plan for it now so that we can prevent damage to the economy through a disruptive strike."

He expressed the hope that the dispute would be in the hands of an arbitrator before the legal strike date, June 15.

Bonner's rise to the top of the country's largest forestry company caps a remarkable career. He was appointed attorney-general at the age of 31, just four years after he graduated from the University of B.C.

As well as the attorney-general's portfolio he served briefly as education minister (1953-54) and as minister of industrial development, trade and commerce (1957-64).

He was widely regarded as Premier Bennett's right-hand man and heir-apparent but after 16 years as attorney-general he resigned to become senior vice-president of administration for MacMillan Bloedel.

Subsequently he became executive vice-president and then vice-president of the company.

J. V. Clyne, 70, president of MacMillan Bloedel and its predecessor company since 1958, announced his retirement at the end of the company's annual meeting in Vancouver Wednesday. (See story Page 13.)

Bonner's appointment as president took effect when he arrived for work at 8:30 p.m. today and wage negotiations with the IWA were very much on his mind.

He noted that the company's first quarter showing was strong (net income of $9 million, compared with $1.4 million in the first quarter last year) but added that the whole year's income must be taken into account. Effective return on investment in 1971 was "only 4.1 per cent, less than could be obtained by investing the money in government bonds.

He was not optimistic about early success in his campaign for a selective free trade area with the United Sates. There was some resistance to the idea in eastern Canada and in the United States.

Major Shakeup in External Affairs

OTTAWA (CP) — A wholesale shakeup in the upper echelons of the external affairs department, involving the reassignment of Canada's first ambassador to the Chinese People's Republic, was announced Wednesday.

Jean-Louis Gagnon, 59, of Montreal, director-general of Information Canada, was named ambassador to UNESCO in Paris.

Returning to Ottawa as an assistant undersecretary after less than a year in Peking is Ralph Collins, 57, of Ottawa.

He is expected to take over his old job as assistant undersecretary for political affairs.

Also named as assistant undersecretary was D'Iberville Fortier, 46, of Montreal, at present ambassador to Tunisia.

He is expected to replace Pierre-Andre Bissonnette, 47, of Montreal, as assistant undersecretary of legal affairs.

Bissonnette is being transferred to London as deputy high commissioner, succeeding R. L. Rogers.

The appointments will take effect "during the course of the next few months," said the announcement by External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp.

Yvon Beaulne, 53, of Ottawa, now ambassador to the United Nations in New York, is being recalled to Ottawa as chief of protocol, replacing Jean Cote.

His job at the UN will be taken by Saul Rae, 57, of Portland, Ont., now ambassador to Mexico.

Arthur Menzies, 55, of Ottawa, at present high commissioner to Australia, will become Canada's ambassador to the North Atlantic Council in Brussels, succeeding Ross Campbell.

Alfred Pick, 56, of Montreal, ambassador to the Netherlands, becomes the first Canadian ambassador and permanent observer to the Organization of American States in Washington.

New appointments of the men displaced in the shuffle, but not immediately named to new jobs, will be announced later, said Sharp.

The announcement means that a number of posts may be left temporarily in the care of charge d'affaires until new ambassadors are chosen.

Collins, a native of China, studied at the University of Alberta and a number of other institutions including Harvard and Oxford. He is a 31-year veteran of the external affairs department.

Attica Film Shows Assault Preceded Surrender Order

NEW YORK (AP) — Film of the state police assault on Attica prison, shown in public for the first time, shows that prisoners were not ordered to surrender until four minutes after state troopers launched their assault to retake the prison.

The reason, says Col. John C. Miller, was that the order was announced over a loudspeaker in a state police helicopter which had to wait until two National Guard helicopters dropping tear gas had cleared out. That took about four minutes.

Miller, first deputy superintendent of the state police, viewed the state police film Wednesday at the latest hearing of the commission investigating the entire episode at Attica last September.

The roar of the helicopters and the noise of gunfire punctuated the 16-minute narrated film that covers the period from when state police and other authorities cautiously moved in until subdued prisoners were made to crawl through muddy ground.

HELD 38 HOSTAGES

Heavy clouds of tear gas and immobilizing gas settled near the ground in the yard of the prison where more than 1,200 rebelling prisoners held 38 hostages.

Thirty-nine prisoners and hostages were killed by authorities in the actual assault Sept. 13 by state police, correction officers and the Genesee County park police. Three prisoners and a hostage died earlier.

Depositions introduced at the commission hearing stated that 189 troopers fired 364 rounds, 17 correction officers fired 74 rounds and the Genesee police fired 12 rounds.

The film showed three clusters of prisoners, each holding a blindfolded hostage at the intersection of the four catwalks known as "Times Square." "They have knives at their throats," the narrator said.

Sadat in Moscow

Mill Hill Subdivision Planned

Application has been made to the Capital Regional District for subdivision of 55.5 acres on the southern sloye of Mill Hill south of Thetis Lake Park.

Owners Ted and Nellie Cuckovich, 442 Atkins, stated in the application that about 203 building lots could be developed after allowing for small parks, recreation areas and roads.

The regional board voted Wednesday to refer the application to the local planning committee with a report to come from the planning department.

The applicants are seeking to have the subdivision created under section 702-A of the Municipal Act dealing with land use contracts.

They said sewers will be provided, with disposal, after secondary treatment, into a drainage field created by land fill and "a portion of the liquid will be used for underground irrigation of the park itself."

TOO MANY CAR CRUSHERS

A Sidney man who built his own car-crusher more than a year ago said Wednesday the provincial government car disposal scheme is not only uneconomic but deprives him of a job.

Irvin Doud, 2255 James White Boulevard, is annoyed that neither the federal nor the provincial government has taken advantage of his offer to carry out a car disposal program on Vancouver Island.

Last September Doud offered his services to the provincial government and was told by Conservation Minister Ken Kiernan that there was no need for such a service in the Greater Victoria area.

RESERVE CLEANUP

In January, Doud and a neighbor, C. T. Taft, 2252 James White Boulevard, wrote to David Anderson, Liberal MP Esquimalt-Saanich, suggesting a program of car cleanup on 19 Indian reservations, utilitizing native help under a local initiatives scheme.

This letter was unanswered.

Doud also criticized the purchase by the provincial government of car crushers from the United States.

"These could have been built in Victoria, creating more work here," he said. "At this rate we will all be unemployed."

The government car disposal plan is scheduled to start on the Saanich Peninsula early this summer in conjunction with the Capital Region District.

The government fee schedule of $5 for compaction of the first 50 cars in any one location is completely unrealistic, Doud said.

"It costs up to $23, including labor and equipment, to strip a car of engine and upholstery and load it on to the compacter."

Doud has obtained permission from Central Saanich to set up his operation in the Keating Cross Road gravel pit and will start work there Friday. He is under contract with Tsartlip and Tsawout Indian band councils to pick up and crush more than 300 cars.

COMPETITION

Meanwhile, two partners in a Langford car-wrecking company say the Capital Regional District is "poking its nose where it doesn't belong."

Terry Henderson and Glen Raymond of Associated Auto Wreckers, 2015 Millstream, said the district is "going into competition with private enterprise if it brings the provincial government's car-crushing units into this area."

They said they are "pretty hot" about the competition, adding that they crushed more than 1,000 junk cars last year, sending the metal to the lower mainland for recycling.

"The regional board knows about our operation and yet it wants the government to compete with us," said Henderson.

"It's the same thing as a flower grower raising spring flowers for the Easter market and suddenly have the government be asked by the regional board to give all the mothers in the land free bouquets for Easter."

WATER CONSUMERS
Discolored Water — Low Pressure

All water consumers served by the Greater Victoria Water District are warned that between 8 p.m. Friday, April 28 and Sunday, April 30, 1972, water may be discolored and pressure lower than normal.

The District will be installing a 42 inch valve in the 48 inch diameter pipeline into Victoria, starting at 8:00 p.m. Friday and work should be completed early Saturday morning. While this work is going on, the 48 inch pipeline will be out of service and water will be routed through smaller pipelines where the higher velocities may pick up sediment and rust and scatter it into parts of the distribution system.

The water will be safe to consume, and any discoloration should disappear by Sunday, but please check for discoloration or sediment before commencing any washing or process requiring clean water.

Open Space Advisors

The Capital Regional District Board appointed its first open-space advisory committee Wednesday.

Preparation of draft terms of reference will be handled by the district's executive committee.

On the committee are Saanich parks administrator Bert Richman and former city parks chief Herb Warren.

Team Top Draw At Horse Show

Black Clydesdales hitched to a five-ton distillery wagon are features of the third annual old-time horse show to be held Sunday at Saanichton fairground.

The eight-horse team of Scottish draft animals is coming to Vancouver Island for the first time and will parade through downtown Victoria Saturday morning.

CLASSIC WAGON

Its sponsor is Potter Distilleries Ltd., of Langley, who have had a classic wagon custom-built of English white oak and African mahogany, including a number of oaken casks. Harness is all patent leather and chrome.

The only team of its kind in Canada and one of three in North America, the matched Clydesdales travel in their own 40-foot highway trailer and are kept to a special diet. Two thousand pounds is a lot of weight to watch.

Parade route through Victoria will be from Garbally Road along Douglas to Fort, Blanshard, Bay, Douglas, Mayfair shopping centre, Douglas and back to Garbally Road B.C. Hydro bus depot.

The show itself starts Sunday at 10 a.m. and except for a short lunch break preceded and followed by a demonstration of the Clydesdales, will continue through 4 p.m.

It is organized by the All Driving Horse Show Group of Victoria and consists of all breeds found on Vancouver Island, plus visitors from the mainland and U.S. with rigs ranging from pony carts to once-fashionable buggies and commercial wagons.

Patterson Raceway is sending sulkies with drivers in racing silks drawn by standardbred horses; Arabians, Morgans, Hackney, Shetland and Welsh ponies will be shown, in all demonstrating 20 different kinds of driving.

School Offers Sex Satire

Students of Reynolds senior high school will present the play Dear Wormwood May 4, 5 and 6.

$2,000 for Drugs

The provincial government has made a $4,000 grant to the B.C. Parkinson's Disease Association.

Health Minister Ralph Loffmark said, "It is intended that $2,000 of this sum will be used to assist with association's administrative costs and the other $2,000 will be used for the purchase of drugs."

Lease Approved

Capital Regional District Board gave its approval Wednesday to a five-year lease for the privately-owned Wooded Wonderland in Beaver Lake Park, Saanich.

The lease extension is subject to consideration of the terms and conditions of Saanich.

Wonderland owner Alf Petterson, whose two-year lease runs out this year, had made a bid earlier for a longer lease. He had told Saanich council he needs a longer lease for financing to make improvements.

In another decision, the board referred the question of leasing of regional district parkland to the chairman of parks committee for study and report.

Student Tops Math Contest

Derek Bissell, a Grade 11 srudent, was the top scoring Vancouver Island student among the 19,428 Canadian entrants of the competition.

Mount Douglas also placed as the top school on the island and ranked fifth in the province, behind Vancouver's Point Grey, Winston Churchil, Carson Graham and St. George's. Mount View high school placed second on the island.
